

LIBRARY

OF THE

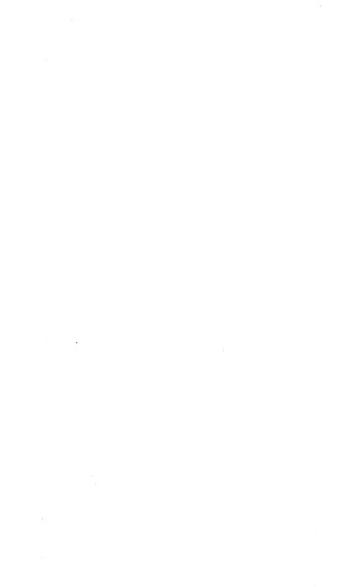

Theological Seminary,

PRINCETON, N. J.

Shelf, 3376

1/15

Ecclefiastical History,

ANTIENT AND MODERN,

FROM

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST,

TO THE

BEGINNING OF THE PRESENT CENTURY:

IN WHICH

The Rife, Progress, and Variations of Church Power

ARE CONSIDERED

In their Connexion with the State of LEARNING and PHILOSOPHY, and the POLITICAL HISTORY of EUROPE during that Period.

By the late learned

JOHN LAWRENCE MOSHEIM, D.D.
And Chancellor of the University of GOTTINGEN.

Translated from the Original Latin,

And accompanied with Notes and Chronological Tables,

By ARCHIBALD MACLAINE, D.D.

To the whole is added AN ACCURATE INDEX.

A NEW EDITION.

VOL. V.

LONDON:

PRINTED FOR T. CADELL, IN THE STRAND.

M DCC XC.

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.

SECTION I.

The GENERAL HISTORY of the CHRISTIAN Church.

I. HE arduous attempts made by the pon- c ENT. tifs, in the preceding century, to advance the glory and majesty of the see of Rome, by extending the limits of the Christian church, and The Colspreading the gospel through the distant nations, faganta side met with much opposition; and, as they were founded at neither well conducted nor properly supported, their fruits were neither abundant nor permanent. But in this century the fame attempts were renewed with vigour, crowned with fuccess, and contributed not a little to give a new degree of flability to the tottering grandeur of the papacy. They were begun by GREGORY XV., who, by the advice of his confessor NARNI, founded at Rome, in the year 1622, the famous Congregation for the propagation of the faith, and enriched it with ample revenues. This congregation, which confifts of thirteen cardinals, two priefts, one monk, and a fecretary [a], is defigned to propa-

[a] Such is the number of members belonging to this Congregation as they stand in the original Bull of GREGORY XV.; see Bullarium Roman. tom. iii. p. 472. edit. Luxemburg.-CERRI mentions the same number, in his Etât Present de l'Eglise Romaine, p. 259. But a different account is given by Vol. V.

XVII. Sect. I.

CENT, gate and maintain the religion of Rome in all parts and corners of the world. Its riches and possessions were so prodigiously augmented by the munificence of URBAN VIII., and the liberality of an incredible number of donors, that its funds are, at this day, adequate to the most expensive and magnificent undertakings. And, indeed, the enterprises of this Congregation are great and extensive. By it a vast number of missionaries are fent to the remotest parts of the world; books of various kinds published, to facilitate the study of foreign and barbarous languages; the facred writings and other pious productions fent abroad to the most distant corners of the globe, and exhibited to each nation and country in their own language and characters; feminaries founded for the fustenance and education of a prodigious number of young men, fet apart for the foreign missions; houses erected for the instruction and fupport of the Pagan youths that are yearly fent from abroad to Rome, that they may return from thence into their respective countries, and become the instructors of their blinded Brethren: not to mention the charitable establishments, that are defigned for the relief and support of those who have fuffered banishment, or been involved in other calamities, on account of their stedfast attachment to the religion of Rome, and their zeal for promoting the glory of its pontif. Such are the arduous and complicated schemes, with the execution of which this congregation is charged; but these, though the principal, are not the only objects of its attention; its views, in a word, are vast, and its exploits almost incredible. Its members hold their affemblies in a splendid and CENT. magnificent palace, whose delightful fituation Sect. 1. adds a fingular luftre to its beauty and grandeur $\lceil b \rceil$.

> AYMON, in his Tableau de la Cour de Rome, part III. chap. iii. p. 279. for he makes this Congregation to confift of cighteen cardinals, one of the pope's fecretaries, one apostolical prothonotary, one referendary, and one of the affestors, or secretaries of the inquifition,

II. To this famous establishment, another less The Calmagnificent indeed, but highly useful, was added, lege prop paganda, in the year 1627, by pope Urban VIII., under &c. infithe denomination of a College or Seminary for the tuted by Utban VIII. propagation of the faith.. This seminary is set apart for the instruction and education of those who are defigned for the foreign missions; and they are here brought up, with the greatest care, in the knowledge of all the languages and sciences that are necessary to prepare them for propagating the Gospel among the distant nations. This excellent foundation was due to the zeal and munificence of JOHN BAPTIST VILES, a Spanish nobleman, who refided at the court of Rome, and who began by prefenting to the pontif all his ample possessions, together with his house, which was a noble and beautiful structure, for this pious and generous purpose. His liberality excited a spirit of pious emulation, and is followed with zeal even to this day. The Seminary was at first committed by URBAN to the care and direction of three canons of the patriarchal churches; but this appointment was afterwards changed, and, ever fince the year 1641, it is governed by the Congregation founded by GREGORY XV. [c].

lege propro-

[c] HELYOT, Histoire des Ordres Monastiques, Religieux et Militaires, tom. viii. cap. xii. p. 78. URB. CERRI Etat present de l'Eglise Romaine, p. 293. where, however, the first founder of this College is called, by missake, VIVES.

[[]b] The authors, who have given an account of this Congregation, are mentioned by FABRICIUS, in his Lux Evangelii toti orbi exoriens, cap. xxxiii. p. 566. Add to thefe, DOROTHEUS ASCANIUS, De Montibus Pietatis Ecclesiæ Roman. p. 522. where there is a complete lift of the books that have been published by this Congregation, from its first institution until the year 1667.

C E N T.
XVII.
SECT. I.

Congregations of Colleges of the fame nature founded in France.

III. The fame zealous spirit reached France, and produced there feveral pious foundations of a like nature. In the year 1663, the Congregation of priests of the foreign missions was instituted by royal authority, while an affociation of bishops and other ecclefiastics found the Parisian Seminary for the missions abroad, designed for the education of those who were set apart for the propagation of Christianity among the Pagan nations. From hence, apostolical vicars are still fent to Siam, Tonquin, Cochin China, and Persia, bishops to Babylon, and missionaries to other Asiatic nations; and all these spiritual envoys are supported by the ample revenues and possessions of the Congregation and Seminary [d]. These priests of the foreign missions [e], and the apostles they send into foreign countries, are almost perpetually involved in altercarions and debates with the Jesuits and their missionaries. The former are shocked at the methods that are ordinarily employed by the latter, in converting the Chinese and other Asiatics to the Christian religion. And the Jesuits, in their turn, absolutely refuse obedience to the orders of the apostolical vicars and bishops, who receive their commission from the Congregation above-mentioned; though this commission be iffued out with the confent of the pope, or of the College de propaganda fide residing at Rome. There was also another religious establishment formed in France, during this century, under the title of the Congregation of the Holy Sacrament, whose founder was Autherius, bishop of Bethlebem, and which, in the year 1644, received an order from URBAN VIII., to have always a number of ecclefialtics ready to exercife their mi- CENT. nistry among the Pagan nations, whenever they should be called upon by the pope, or the Congregation de propaganda, for that purpose [f]. It would be endless to mention other affociations of less note, that were formed in feveral countries for promoting the cause of Christianity among the darkened nations; as also the care taken by the Jesuits, and other religious communities, to have a number of missionaries always ready for that purpose.

[e] These ecclesiastics are commonly called in France, Mef-

Leurs des Mifions Etrangeres.

[[]d] See the Gallia Christiana Benedictionram, tom. vii. p. 1024.—Helyot, Histoire des Ordres Monastiques, tom. viii. chap. xii. p. 84.

IV. These congregations and colleges fent forth Missionaries those legions of missionaries, who, in this cen-multiply, tury, covered, in a manner, the whole face of cially those the globe, and converted to the profession of suits. Christianity at least, if not to its temper and spirit, multitudes of persons in the fiercest and most barbarous nations. The religious orders, that make the greatest figure in these missions, are the Jesuits, the Dominicans, the Franciscans, and the Capuchins, who, though concerned in one common cause, agree, nevertheless, very ill among themselves, accusing each other publicly and reciprocally, and that with the most bitter reproaches and invectives, of want of zeal in the fervice of Christ, nay of corrupting the purity of the Christian doctrine to promote their ambitious purpofes. But none are fo univerfally accused of finister views and unworthy practices, in this respect, as the Jesuits, who are singularly odious in the eyes of all the other missionaries, and are looked upon as a very dangerous and pernicious fet of apostles by a considerable part of the Romish church. Nor, indeed, can they be viewed in any other light, if the general report be true, that, instead of instructing their proselytes in the genuine doctrines of Christianity, they teach them a corrupt fystem of religion and

[f] HELYOT, loc. cit. cap. xiii. p. 87. 100.

XVII. SECT. I.

CENT, morality that fits easy upon their consciences, and is reconcileable with the indulgence of their appetites and passions;—that they not only tolerate, but even countenance, in these new converts, feveral profane opinions and superstitious rites and customs; -that, by commerce, carried on with the most rapacious avidity, and various other methods little confiftent with probity and candour, they have already acquired an overgrown opulence, which they augment from day to day;that they burn with the thirst of ambition, and are constantly gaping after worldly honours and prerogatives; -that they are perpetually employing the arts of adulation, and the feductions of bribery, to infinuate themselves into the friendship and protection of men in power; -that they are deeply involved in civil affairs, in the cabals of courts, and the intrigues of politicians;—and finally, that they frequently excite intestine commotions and civil wars, in those states and kingdoms, where their views are obstructed or disappointed, and refuse obedience to the Roman pontif, and to the vicars and bishops that bear his commission. These accusations are indeed grievous, but they are perfectly well attested, being confirmed by the most striking circumstantial evidence, as well as by a prodigious number of unexceptionable witnesses. Among these we may reckon many of the most illustrious and respectable members of the church of Rome, whose testimony cannot be imputed to the fuggestions of envy, on the one hand, nor confidered as the effect of temerity or ignorance on the other: fuch are the cardinals, the members of the Congregation de propaganda fide, and even some of the popes themselves. These testimonies are supported and confirmed by glaring facts, even by the proceedings of the Jesuits in China, Abyssinia, Japan, and India, where they have dishonoured the cause of Christianity, tices [g].

Christianity, and hurt the interest of Rome, in CENT. the most fensible manner by their corrupt prac- SECT. I.

V. The Jesuits exhausted all the resources of The Jesuits their peculiar artifice and dexterity to impose upon, filence upon their accusers, to confound their adverfaries, and to give a specious colour to their own proceedings. But all their stratagems were ineffectual. The court of Rome was informed of their odious frauds; and this information was, by no means, looked upon as groundlefs. Many circumstances concur to prove this, and among others the conduct of the Congregation at Rome, by which the foreign missions are carried on and directed. For it is remarkable, that, during many years past, the Jesuits have been much less employed by that Congregation, than in former times, and are also treated, on almost every occasion, with a degree of circumspection that manifestly implies suspicion and diffidence. Other religious orders have evidently gained the afcendant they formerly held; and, in the nice and critical affairs of the church, and more especially in what relates to the propagation of the Gospel in foreign parts, much more confidence is placed in the auftere fobriety, poverty, industry, and patience of the Capuchins and Carmelites, than in the opulence, artifice, genius, and fortitude of the disciples of Loyola. On the other hand it is certain, that if the Jesuits are not much trusted, they are, however, more or less feared; fince neither the powerful Congregation, now mentioned, nor even the Roman pontifs themselves, venture to reform all the abuses, which they filently difapprove, or openly blame, in the conduct of this

[[]g] The reader will find an ample relation of these facts, supported by a cloud of witnesses, in the Preface to the Hiftoire de la Compagnie de Jesus, published at Utrecht in the year 1741.

CENT. XVII. SECT. I. infidious order. This connivance, however involuntary, is become a matter of necessity. opulence of the Jesuits is so excessive, and their credit and influence are grown to extensive and formidable, in all those parts of the world that embrace the religion of Rome, that they carry their infolence so far as to menace often the pontif on his throne, who cannot, without the utmost peril, oblige them to submit to his orders, where they are disposed to be refractory. more, the decisions of the pope are frequently suggested by this powerful society, and it is only in fuch a case that the society treats them with unlimited respect. When they come from any other quarter, they are received in a very different manner by the Jesuits, who trample upon some of them with impunity, and interpret others with their usual dexterity in such a manner, as to anfwer the views and promote the interests of their ambitious order. Such, at least, are the accounts that are generally given of their proceedings; accounts which, though contradicted by them, are nevertheless supported by striking and palpable evidence.

The methods of converting practifed by the Jefuits procure them enemies.

VI. The rife of these dissensions between the Jesuits and the other Roman missionaries is owing to the methods of conversion used by the former, which are entirely different from those that are employed by the latter. The crafty disciples of Loyola judge it proper to attack the superstition of the Indian nations by artifice and stratagem, and to bring them only gradually, with the utmost caution and prudence, to the knowledge of Christianity. In consequence of this principle, they interpret and explain the ancient doctrines of Paganism, and also those that Confucius taught in China, in such a manner as to soften and diminish, at least in appearance, their opposition to the truths of the Gospel; and whenever they find.

find, in any of the religious fystems of the Indians, CENT. tenets or precepts that bear even the faintest XVII. resemblance of certain doctrines or precepts of Christianity, they employ all their dexterity and zeal to render this refemblance more plaufible and ftriking, and to perfuade the Indians that there is a great conformity between their ancient theology and the new religion they are exhorted to embrace. They go still further; for they indulge their profelytes in the observance of all their national customs and rites, except such as are glaringly inconfiftent with the genius and spirit of the Christian worship. These rites are modified a little by the Jesuits, and are directed towards a different set of objects, so as to form a fort of coalition between Paganism and Christianity. To fecure themselves an ascendant over the untutored minds of these simple Indians, they study their natural inclinations and propenfities, comply with them on all occasions, and carefully avoid whatever may shock them. And as in all countries the clergy, and men of eminent learning, are fupposed to have a considerable influence on the multitude, fo the Jesuits are particularly assiduous in courting the friendship of the Indian priests, which they obtain by various methods, in the choice of which they are far from being fcrupulous. But the protection of men in power is the great object they principally aim at, as the furest method of establishing their authority, and extending their influence. And hence they study all the arts that can render them agreeable or useful to great men; hence their application to the mathematics, physic, poetry, to the theory of painting, fculpture, architecture, and the other elegant arts; and hence their perseverance in studying men and manners, the interests of princes, and the affairs of the world, in order to prepare them for giving counsel in critical situations, and fuggefting

SECT. I.

CENT. fuggefting expedients in perplexing and complicated cases. It would be endless to enumerate all the circumstances that have been complained of in the proceedings of the Jesuits. These that have been now mentioned, have ruined their credit in the esteem of the other missionaries, who confider their artful and infidious dealings as every way unfuitable to the character and dignity of the ambassadors of Christ, whom it becomes to plead the cause of God with an honest fimplicity, and an ingenuous openness and candour, without any mixture of diffimulation or fraud. And, accordingly, we find the other religious orders, that are employed in the foreign missions, proceeding in a very different method in the exercise of their ministry. They attack openly the superstitions of the Indians, in all their connexions and in all their confequences, and are studious to remove whatever may feem adapted to nourish them. They shew little regard to the ancient rites and customs in use among the blinded nations, and little respect for the authority of those by whom they were established. They treat with a certain indifference and contempt the Pagan priefts, grandees, and princes, and preach, without disguise, the peculiar doctrines of Christianity, while they attack, without hefitation or fear, the fuperstitions of those nations they are called to convert.

Christianity propagated in India.

VII. These missionaries of the court of Rome spread the fame of the Christian religion through the greatest part of Asia during this century. To begin with India; it is observable, that the ministerial labours of the Jesuits, Theatins, and Augustinians contributed to introduce some rays of divine truth, mixed, indeed, with much darkness and superstition, into those parts of that vast region that had been possessed by the Portuguese before their expulsion from thence by the Dutch.

But

But of all the missions that were established in CENT. these distant parts of the globe, none has been SECT. I. more constantly and universally applauded than that of Madura, and none is faid to have produced more abundant and permanent fruit. It was undertaken and executed by Robert De No-BILI [b], an Italian Jefuit, who took a very fingular method of rendering his ministry successful. Confidering, on the one hand, that the Indians beheld with an eye of prejudice and aversion all the Europeans, and, on the other, that they held in the highest veneration the order of Brachmans, as descended from the Gods; and that, impatient of other rulers, they paid an implicit and unlimited obedience to them alone, he affumed the appearance and title of a Brachman, that had come from a far country, and, by befinearing his countenance and imitating that most austere and painful method of living that the Sanianes or Penitents observe, he at length persuaded the credulous people that he was, in reality, a member of that venerable Order [i]. By this stratagem. he

[b] Others call this famous missionary Robert De Nobi-

[i] URBAN CERRI, Etât present de l'Eglise Romaine, p. 173. Nobili, who was looked upon by the Jesuits as the chief apostle of the Indians after FRANÇOIS XAVIER, took incredible pains to acquire a knowledge of the religion, cuftoms, and language of Madura, fufficient for the purpofes of his ministry. But this was not all: for, to flop the mouths of his opposers, and particularly of those who treated his character of Brachman as an impostor, he produced an old, dirty parchment, in which he had forged, in the ancient Indian characters, a deed, shewing that the Brachmans of Rome were of much older date than those of India, and that the Jesuits of Rome descended, in a direct line, from the God Brama. Nay, Father Jouvenci, a learned Jesuit, tells us, in the history of his Order, something yet more remarkable; even that ROBERT DE NOBILI, when the authenticity of his smoaky parchment was called in question by some Indian unbelievers, declared upon oath, before the affembly of the Brachmans

CENT. he gained over to Christianity twelve eminent XVII. Sect. I.

Brachmans, whose example and influence engaged a prodigious number of the people to hear the instructions, and to receive the doctrine, of this famous missionary. On the death of ROBERT, this fingular mission was for some time at a stand, and feemed even to be neglected [k]. But it was afterwards renewed, by the zeal and industry of the Portuguele Jesuits, and is still carried on by feveral missionaries of that Order, from France and Portugal, who have inured themselves to the terrible austerities that were practifed by ROBERT, and that are thus become, as it were, the appendages of that mission. These sictitious Brachmans, who boldly deny their being Europeans or Franks [1], and only give themselves out for inhabitants of the northern regions, are faid to have converted a prodigious number of Indians to Christianity; and, if common report may be trusted to, the congregations they have already founded in those countries grow larger and more numerous from year to year. Nor, indeed, do these accounts appear, in the main, unworthy of credit [m]; though we must not be too ready to receive.

Brachmans of Madura, that he (Nobili) derived really and truly his origin from the God Brama. Is it not aftonishing that this Reverend Father should acknowledge, is it not monstrous that he should applaud, as a piece of pious ingenuity, this detestable instance of perjury and fraud? See Jouvenci Histoire des Jesuites. - Norbert, Memoires Historiques sur les Missions des Malab. tom. ii. p. 145.

[k] URBAN CERRI Etât present de l'Eglise Romaine, p. 173. [1] The Indians distinguish all the Europeans by the general denomination of Franks, or (as they pronounce the word)

[m] The Jesuits seem to want words to express the glory that has accrued to their Order from the remarkable fuccefs and the abundant fruits of this famous mission, as also the dreadful fufferings and hardships their missionaries have fuftained in the course of their ministry. See the Lettres Curieuses ei Edifiantes ecrites des Missions Etrangeres, tom. i. p. 9. 32. 46.

receive, as authentic and well attested, the relations that have been given of the intolerable hardships

50. 55. where father MARTIN observes (p. 9.) that this miffrom furpasses all others; that each missionary baptizes, at least, a thousand converts every year (p. 11.); that, nevertheless, Baptism is not indifcriminately administered, or granted with facility and precipitation to every one that demands it (p. 12.); that those aubo present themselves to be baptized, are accurately examined until they exhibit fufficient proofs of their fincerity, and are carefully instructed during the space of four months in order to their reception; that, after their reception, they live like angels rather than like men; and that the smallest appearance of mortal sins is fearcely, if ever, to be found among them. If any one is curious enough to inquire into the causes that produce such an uncemmon degree of fanctity among these new converts, the Jesuits allege the two following; the first is modestly drawn from the holy lives and examples of the missionaries, rubo (p. 15.) pals their days in the greatest austerity, and in acts of mortification that are terrible to nature (see tom. xii. p. 206. tom. xv. p. 211.): who are not allowed, for inflance, the use of bread, wine, fish, or flesh, but are obliged to be satisfied with water and vegetables, dreffed in the most insipid and disgusting manner, and whose clothing, with the other circumstances of life, are answerable to their miserable diet. The second cause of this unusual appearance, alleged by the Jesuits, is the fituation of these new Christians, by which they are cut off from all communication and intercourse with the Europeans, who are faid to have corrupted, by their licentious manners, almost all the other Indian profelytes to Christianity. Add to all this, other confiderations, which are scattered up and down in the Letters above cited, tom. i. p. 16. 17. tom. ii. p. 1. tom. iii. p. 217. tom. v. p. 2. tom. vi. p. 119. tom. ix. p. 126.-Madura is a separate kingdom, situated in the midst of the Indian Peninsula beyond the Ganges *. There is an accurate map of the territory comprehended in the mission of Madura, published by the Jesuits in the xvth tome of the Lettres Curienses et Edifantes, p. 60. The French Jesuits fet on foot, in the kingdom of Carnate and in the adjacent provinces, a mission like that of Madura (Lettres Cur. tom. v. p. 3. 240.); and, towards the conclusion of this century, other missionaries of the same Order formed an enterprise of the fame nature in the dominions of the king of Marava

^{$\}mathcal{O}$ * Th's is a midake, Madura is in the Indian Peninfula within Canges, and not beyond it. Its principal produce is rice, which is one of the principal influments made use of by the ricb Jesuits in the conversion of the poor Indians.

CENT. XVII. SECT.I. thips and fufferings that have been fuftained by these Jesuit-Brachmans in the cause of Christ. Many imagine, and not without good foundation, that their austerities are, generally speaking, more dreadful in appearance than in reality; and that, while they outwardly affect an extraordinary degree of self-denial, they indulge themselves privately in a free and even luxurious use of the creatures, have their tables delicately served, and their cellars exquisitively surnished, in order to refresh themselves after their labours.

In the kingdoms of Siam, Tonqu'n, &c.

VIII. The knowledge of Christianity was sirst conveyed to the kingdoms of Siam, Tong-king, and Kochinchina, by a mission of Jesuits, under the direction of Alexander of Rhodes, a native of Avignon [n], whose instructions were received with uncommon docility by a prodigious number of the inhabitants of these countries. An

(tom. ii. p. 1. tom. x. p. 79.). The Jesuits themselves however acknowledge (tom. vi. p. 3. 15. 66. 107.), that this latter establishment succeeded much better than that of Carnate. The reason of this may perhaps be, that the French Jesuits, who founded the mission of Carnate, could not endure, with such conflancy and patience, the auftere and mortified manner of living which an inflitution of this nature required, nor imitate the rigid felf-denial of the Brachmans, fo well as the missionaries of Spain and Portugal .- Be that as it may, all these missions, that formerly made fuch a noise in the world, were suspended and abandoned, in confequence of a papal mandate iffued out, in the year 1744, by Benedict XIV. who declared his disapprobation of the mean and perfidious methods of converting the Indians that were practifed by the Jesuits, and pronounced it unlawful to make use of frauds or infidious artifices in extending the limits of the Christian church. See Norbert, Memoires Historiques pour les Missions Orientales, tom. i. & iv. MAMMA-CHIUS has given an account of this matter, and also published the mandate of BENEDICT, in his Orig. et Antiq. Christian. tom. ii. p. 245. See also Lockman's Travels of the Jesuits, &c. translated from the Lettres Edifiantes, &c. vol. i. p. 4. 9. 2d edit.

[n] See the Writings of ALEXANDER DE RHODES, who was undoubtedly a man of fense and spirit, and more especially his Travels, which were published in 4to, at Paris, in the years 1666 and 1682.

account of the success of this spiritual expedition CENT. being brought to ALEXANDER VII. in the year 1658, determined that pontif to commit this new. church to the inspection and government of a certain number of bishops, and chose for this purpose some French priests out of the Congregation of foreign missions, to carry his orders to the rising community, and to rule over it as his representatives and vicegerents. But the Jesuits, who can bear no fuperiors, and fcarcely an equal, treated these pious men with the greatest indignity, loaded them with injuries and reproaches, and would not permit them to share their labours, nor to partake of their glory [0]. Hence arose, in the court of Rome, a long and tedious contest, which ferved to shew, in the plainest manner, that the Jesuits were ready enough to make use of the [0] There were feveral Pamphlets and Memorials published at Paris, in the years 1666, 1674, and 1681, in which these French missionaries, whom the Jesuits refused to admit as fellow-labourers in the conversion of the Indians, relate, in an eloquent and affecting thrain, the injuries they had received from that jealous and ambitious Order. The most ample and accurate narration of that kind was published at Paris, in the year 1688, by FRANCIS PALLU, whom the pope had created bishop of Heliopolis. The same matter is largely treated in the Gallia Christiana of the learned Benedictines, tom. vii. p. 1027. and a concise account of it is also given by URBAN CERRI, in his Etât present de l'Eglise Romaine, p. 199. This latter author, though a fecretary of the Congregation de propaganda fide, yet inveighs with a just severity and a generous warmth against the perfidy, cruelty, and ambition of the Jesuits, and laments it as a most unhappy thing, that the Congregation, now mentioned. has not power enough to fet limits to the rapacity and tyranny of that arrogant fociety. He further observes, towards the end of his Narrative, which is addressed to the pope, that he was not at liberty to reveal all the abominations which the Jesuits had committed, during the course of this contest, but, by the order of his Holiness, was obliged to pass them over in silence. His words are: Votre Sainteté a ordonnée, qu'elles demeurassent fous le secret .- See also on this subject, HELYOT, Histoire des Ordres Monastiques, tom. viii. chap. xii. p. 84.

authority

CENT. XVII. SECT. I. authority of the pope, when it was necessary to promote their interests, or to extend their influence and dominion; but that they did not hesitate, on the other hand, to treat the same authority with indifference and contempt in all cases, where it appeared in opposition to their private views and personal interests. After this, Lewis XIV. sent a solemn embassy [p], in the year 1684, to the

[p] The French bishops of Heliopolis, Berytus, and Metellopelis, that had been fent into India about the year 1663, had prepared the way for this embaffy, and by an account of the favourable dispositions of the monarch, then reigning at Siam, had encouraged the French king to make a new attempt for the establishment of Christianity in these distant regions. A fixed refidence had been formed at Siam for the French missionaries, together with a feminary for instructing the youth in the languages of the circumjacent nations, who had all fettlements, or camps, as they are called, at the capital. A church was also erected there, by the king's permission, in the year 1667, and that prince proposed several questions to the missionaries, which seemed to discover a propensity to inform himself concerning their religion. The bishop of Heliopolis, who had gone back to Europe on the affairs of the million, returned to Siam in the year 1673, with letters from LEWIS XIV., and Pope CLEMENT IX., accompanied with rich presents, to thank his Siamese majesty for the favours beflowed on the French bishops. In a private audience to which he was admitted, he explained, in answer to a question proposed to him by the king of Siam, the motive that had engaged the French bishops to cross so many seas, and the French king to fend his subjects to countries so far from home, obferving, that a firong define in his prince, to extend the kingdom of the true God, was the file reason of their woyage. Upon this we are told, that the king of Siam offered a port in any part of his dominions, where a city might be built to the honour of LEWIS THE GREAT, and where, if he thought fit, he might fend a viceroy to refide; and declared afterwards, in a public affembly of the grandees of his court, that he would leave all his fubjects at liberty to embrace the Romish faith .-- All this raifed the hopes of the missionaries to a very high pitch; but the expectations they derived from thence of converting the king himself were entirely groundless, as may be seen from a very remarkable declaration of that monarch in the following note. See the Relation des Missions et des Voyages des Eveques François, passim.

king of Siam, whose prime minister, at that time, CENT. was a Greek Christian, named Constantine Sect. I. FAULKON, a man of an artful, ambitious, and enterprifing spirit. The design of this embassy was to engage the Pagan prince to embrace Christianity, and to permit the propagation of the Gofpel in his dominions. The ambaffadors were attended by a great retinue of priefts and Jesuits, fome of whom were well acquainted with those branches of science that were agreeable to the taste of the king of Siam. It was only, however, among a small part of the people, that the labours of these missionaries were crowned with any degree of fuccess; for the monarch himself, and the great men of his kingdom, remained unmoved by their exhortations, and deaf to their inftructions [q]. The king, indeed, though he chofe to [q] When Monsieur DE CHAUMONT, who was charged with this famous embaffy, arrived at Siam, he prefented a long memorial to the monarch of that country, intimating how folicitous the king of France was to have his Siamese majesty of the fame religion with himself. CHAW NARAYA (for so was the latter named), who feems to have always deceived the French by encouraging words, which administered hopes that he never intended to accomplish, answered this memorial in a very acute and artful manner. After asking who had made the king of France believe that he entertained any fuch fentiments, he defired his minister FAULKON to tell the French ambaffador, "That he left it to his most Christian majesty to " judge, whether the change of a religion that had been fol-"lowed in his dominions, without interruption, for 2229 " years, could be a matter of small importance to him, or a " demand with which it was eafy to comply; - that befides, " he was much furprifed to find the king of France concern " himself so zealously and so warmly in a matter which relat-" ed to God, and not to him; and in which, though it related " to God, the Deity did not feem to meddle at all, but left it "entirely to human diferetion." The king afked, at the fame time, "Whether the true God, that created heaven and " earth, and had bestowed on mankind such different natures " and inclinations, could not, when he gave to men the fame " bodies and fouls, have also, if he had pleased, inspired VOL. V.

XVII. SECT. I.

CENT. to persevere in the religion of his ancestors, yet discovered a spirit of condescension and toleration towards the conductors of this mission; and his favourite Constantine had fecretly invited the French to Siam, to support him in his authority, which was beheld with an envious eye by feveral of the grandees. So that as long as this prince and his minister lived, the French still retained fome hopes of accomplishing their purpose, and of converting the inhabitants of Siam to the faith. But these hopes entirely vanished in the year 1688, when, in a popular fedition, excited and fomented by some prince of the blood, both king and minister were put to death [7]; and then the missionaries returned home.

In China.

IX. China, the most extensive and opulent of all the Afiatic kingdoms, could not but appear

"them with the fame religious fentiments, and have made all " nations live and die in the fame laws. He added, "That, fince order among men, and unity in religion, depend " absolutely on Divine Providence, who could as easily intro-" duce them into the world as that divertity of fects that prevails in it, it is natural to conclude from thence, that the " true God takes as much pleasure to be honoured by diffe-" rent modes of religion and worship, as to be glorified by a " prodigious number of different creatures, who praise him " every one in his own way." He moreover asked, "Whe-ther that beauty and variety, which we admire in the order of nature, be less admirable in the order of supernatural " things, or less becoming in the wisdom of God?-However " that be (continued the king of Siam) fince we know that " God is the absolute master of the world, and that we are " perfuaded nothing comes to pass contrary to his will, I re-" fign my person and dominions into the arms of his provi-"dence, and beseech his eternal wisdom to dispose thereof according to his good will and pleasure." See TACHARD, Prem. Voyage de Siam, p. 218; as also the Journal of the Abbé CHOISI, who was employed in that embassy.

[r] An account of this embassy, and of the transactions of both ambastadors and missionaries, is given by TACHARD, CHAUMONT, and LA LOUBERT. The relations, however, of the author last mentioned, who was a man of learning and candour, descrive undoubtedly the preference.

to

to the missionaries and their constituents an ob- CENT. ject worthy of their pious zeal and ghoftly ambition. And accordingly a numerous tribe of Jesuits, Dominicans, Franciscans, and Capuchins, set out, about the commencement of this century, with a view to enlighten that immense region with the knowledge of the Gospel. All these, however they differ in other matters, agree in proclaiming the aftonishing success of their ministerial labours. It is nevertheless certain, that the principal honour of these religious exploits belongs to the Jesuits, who, with a peculiar degree of dexterity and address, removed the obstacles that were the most adapted to retard the progress of Christianity, among a people whose natural acuteness and pride were accompanied with a fuperstitious attachment to the religion and manners of their ancestors. These artful missionaries studied the temper, character, taste, inclinations, and prejudices of the Chinese with incredible attention; and perceiving that their natural fagacity was attended with an ardent desire of improvement in knowledge, and that they took the highest pleasure in the study of the arts and sciences, and more especially in the mathematics, they lost no occasion of fending for such members of their Order as, besides their knowledge of mankind, and prudence in transacting business, were also masters of the different branches of learning and philosophy. Some of these learned Jesuits acquired, in a very short space of time, such a high degree of credit and influence by their fagacity and eloquence, the infinuating sweetness and facility of their manners, and their furprizing dexterity and skill in all kinds of transactions and affairs, that they came at length to the knowledge of the emperor, were loaded by him with the most honourable marks of distinction, and were employed in the most seSECT. I.

CENT. cret and important deliberations and affairs of the cabinet. Under the auspicious protection of such powerful patrons, the other missionaries, though of a lower rank and of inferior talents, were delivered from all apprehension of danger in the exercife of their ministry, and thus encouraged to exert themselves with spirit, vigour, and perseverance, in the propagation of the Gospel, in all the provinces of that mighty empire.

The pro-gref of Christianity in Coina.

X. This promifing aspect of things was clouded for some time, when Xun-chi, the first Chinese emperor of the Mogol race, died, and left a fon under age as his only heir. The grandees of the empire, to whose tuition and care this young prince was committed, had long entertained an aversion to Christianity, and only sought for a convenient occasion of venting their rage against it. This occasion was now offered and greedily embraced. The guardians of the young prince abused his power to execute their vindictive purposes, and, after using their utmost efforts to extirpate Christianity wherever it was profef-fed, they perfecuted its patrons, more especially the Jesuits, with great bitterness, deprived them of all the honours and advantages they had enjoyed, and treated them with the utmost barbarity and injustice. John Adam Schaal, their chief, whose advanced age and extensive knowledge, together with the honourable place he held at court, feemed to demand fome marks of exemption from the calamities that purfued his brethren, was thrown into prison, and condemned to death, while the other missionaries were fent into exile. These dismal scenes of persecution were exhibited in the year 1664; but, about five years after this gloomy period, when KANG-HI affumed the reins of government, a new face of things appeared. The Christian cause, and the labours of its minifters, not only refumed their former credit and vigour, vigour, but, in process of time, gained ground, CENT, and received fuch diftinguished marks of protec- Sect. I. tion from the throne, that the Jefuits usually date from this period the commencement of the golden age of Christianity in China. . The new emperor, whose noble and generous spirit [s] was equal to the uncommon extent of his genius, and to his ardent curiofity in the investigation of truth, began his reign by recalling the Jesuits to his court, and restoring them to the credit and influence which they had formerly enjoyed.. But his generofity and munificence did not stop here; for he fent to Europe for a still greater number of the members of that Order, such of them partigularly as were eminent for their skill in the arts and sciences.. Some of these he placed in the highest offices of the state, and employed in civil negociations and transactions of the greatest importance., Others he chose for his private friends and counsellors, who were to affist him with their advice in various matters, and to direct his philosophical and mathematical studies. These private friends and counfellors were principally chofen from among the French Jesuits.. Thus the Order was raised, in a little time, to the very fummit of favour, and clothed with a degree of authority and luftre to which it had not hitherto attained.. In fuch a ftate of things, it is but natural to conclude, that the Christian religion would not want powerful patrons, nor its preachers be left deftitute and unfupported.. And

^[3] See JOACH. BOUVETI Icon Regia Monarchæ Sinarum, translated into Latin by the famous LEIBNITZ, and published in the year 1699, in the second part of his Novissima Sinica. See also Du HALDE'S Description de la Chine, and the Lettres Edistantes, &c. in which the Jesuits give an account of the success of their missions. In these productions, the virtues and talents of this emperor, which seem indeed to be universally acknowledged, are described and celebrated with peculiar encomiums.

SECT. I.

CENT. accordingly a multitude of spiritual labourers from all parts of Europe repaired to China, allured by the prospect of a rich, abundant, and glorious harvest. And, indeed, the success of their ministry seemed to answer fully the extent of their expectations; fince it is well known that, with very little pains, and still less opposition, they made a prodigious number of converts to the profession of the Gospel. The triumph of Christianity feemed to be complete, when, in the year 1692; the emperor, from an excessive attachment to the Jesuits, issued out that remarkable edict, by which he declared, that the Christian religion was in no wife detrimental to the fafety or interests of the monarchy, as its enemies pretended, and by which also he granted to all his subjects an entire freedom of conscience, and a full permisfion to embrace the Gospel. This triumph was still further confirmed, when the same prince, in the year 1700, ordered a magnificent church to be built for the Jesuits within the precincts of the imperial palace [t].

The lefuits accused of fraudulent practices.

XI. This furprifing fuccess of the Christian cause was undoubtedly owing to the dexterity and perfeverance of the Jefuits, as even the greateft enemies of that artful Order are obliged to acknowledge. But it is quite another question, [t] There is a concise, but interesting account of these revolutions, given by Du HALDE, in his Description de la Chine, tom. iii. p. 128. and by the Jefuit FONTANEY, in the Lettres Edifiantes et Curienses, tom. viii. p. 176 .- They are related in a more diffuse and ample manner by other writers. See SUAREZ, De Libertate Religionem Christianam apud Sinas propagandi Narratio, published in the year 1698, by LEIBNITZ, in the first part of his Novissima Sinica. The other authors who have treated this branch of history are mentioned by FABRICIUS, in his Lux Evangelii toti Orbi exoriens, cap. xxxix. p. 663. See also an Ecclefiostical History of China, which I published in German in the year 1748. * This History was translated into English, and published in the year 1750, with this title: Authentic Memoirs of the Christian Church in China.

whether this fuccess was obtained by methods CENT. agreeable to the dictates of reason and conscience, Sect. I, and confistent with the dignity and genius of the Christian religion? This latter point has been long debated, with great animosity and vehemence, on both fides; and the contention is not vet ended. The adversaries of the Jesuits, whose opposition is as keen as their numbers are formidable, and more especially the Jansenists and Dominicans, affert boldly, that the fuccess above mentioned was obtained by the most odious frauds, nay, even in many cases, by the most detestable crimes. They charge the Jesuits with having given a false exposition and a spurious account of the ancient religion of the Chinese, and with having endeavoured to perfuade the emperor and the Chinese nobility, that the primitive theology of their nation, and the doctrine of their great instructor and philosopher Confucius, differed almost in nothing from the doctrine of the Gospel. They are further charged with having invented a variety of historical fictions, in order to perfuade the Chinese (who are vehemently attached to whatever carries the air of a remote antiquity), that Jesus Christ had been known and worshipped in their nation many ages ago; and there fictions are supposed to have prejudiced the emperor in favour of Christianity, and to have engaged certain grandees of the kingdom not only to grant their protection and favour to the Jesuits, but even to become members of their fociety. Nor do the accufations brought against the disciples of Lovola end here; for they are faid to have entirely loft fight of all the duties and obligations that are incumbent on the ministers of Christ, and the heralds of a spiritual kingdom, by not only accepting of worldly honours and places of civil authority and power, but even aspiring after them with all the ardor C 4

SECT. I

CENT. of an infatiable ambition, by boafting, with an arrogant vanity, of the protection and munificence of the emperor, by deferting the simplicity of a frugal and humble appearance, and indulging themselves in all circumstances of external pomp and splendor, such as costly garments, numerous retinues, luxurious tables, and magnificent houses. To all which it is added, that they employed much more zeal and industry in the advancement of human science, especially the mathematics, than in promoting Christian knowledge and virtue; and that they even went so far as to meddle in military matters, and to concern themfelves both personally and by their counsels in the bloody fcenes of war. While these heavy crimes are laid to the charge of those Jesuits, who, by their capacity and talents, had been raised to a high degree of credit in the empire, the more obscure members of that same Order, who were appointed more immediately to instruct the Chinese in the truths of the Gospel, are far from being confidered as blamelefs. They are accused of spending in the practice of usury, and in various kinds of traffic, the precious moments which ought to have been confecrated to the functions of their ministry, and of using low and dishonourable methods of advancing their fortunes, and infinuating themfelves into the favour of the multitude. The Jefuits acknowledge, that a part of these accusations are founded upon facts; but they give a specious colour to those facts, and use all their artifice and eloquence to justify what they cannot deny. Other articles of thefe complaints they treat as groundlefs, and as the fictions of calumny, that are invented with no other defign than to cast a reproach upon their Order. An impartial inquirer into these matters will perhaps find, that if, in feveral points, the Jesuits defend themselves in a very weak and unfatisfactory fatisfactory manner, there are others, in which CENT. their misconduct seems to have been exaggerated SECT. I. by envy and prejudice in the complaints of their adversaries.

XII. The grand accusation that is brought An account against the Jesuits in China, is this: That they eight charge make an impious mixture of light and darkness, brought aof Chinese superstition and Christian truth, in or- Jesuits. der to triumph with the greater speed and facility over the prejudices of that people against the doctrine of the Gospel; and that they allow their converts to retain the profane customs and the abfurd rites of their Pagan ancestors. Ricci, who was the founder of the Christian Church in that famous monarchy, declared it as his opinion, that the greatest part of those rites, which the Chinese are obliged by the laws of their country to perform, might be innocently observed by the new converts. To render this opinion less shocking, he supported and explained it upon the following principle: that these rites were of a civil and not of a facred nature; that they were invented from views of policy, and not for any purposes of religion; and that none but the very dregs of the populace in China, confidered them in any other light [u]. This opinion was not only rejected by the Dominicans and Franciscans, who were affociated with the Jesuits in this important mission, but also by some even of the most learned Jesuits both in China and Japan, and particularly by Nicholas Lombard, who published a memorial, containing the reasons [v] upon which

[u] See MAMMACHII Origin. et Antiquit. Christian. tom. ii. p. 373.

[ข] See Chr. Kortholts Prafatio ad Volumen II. Epistolar. Leibnitiar. § vi. p. 18. who has likewife fubjoined to this work the pieces composed against the Jesuits by LOMBARD and As-THONY DE S. MARIA, with the remarks of LEIBNITZ. There is also inferted in this collection (p. 413.) an ampie differtation on the Chinese philosophy, drawn up by LEIBNITZ, who pleads therein the cause of the Jesuits.

SECT. I.

CENT. his diffent was founded. This contest, which was long carried on in a private manner, was brought, by the Dominicans, before the tribunal of the pontif, in the year 1645, and from that period continued to produce great divisions, commotions, and caballing, in the church of Rome. INNOCENT X. in the year now mentioned, pronounced in favour of the Dominicans, and highly condemned the indulgence which the Jesuits had shewn to the Chinese superstitions. But, about eleven years after, this fentence, though not formally reverfed, was nevertheless virtually annulled by ALEXANDER VII. at the instigation of the Tefuits, who perfuaded that pontiff to allow the Chinese converts the liberty of performing several of the rites to which they had been accustomed, and for which they discovered a peculiar fondness. This, however, did not hinder the Dominicans from renewing their complaints in the year 1661; and again, in 1674, under the pontificate of Innocent XI.; though the power and credit of the Jesuits seemed to triumph over all their remonstrances. This fatal difpute, which had been suspended for several years in China, broke out there again, in the year 1684, with greater violence than ever; and then the victory feemed to incline to the fide of the Dominicans, in confequence of a decision pronounced in the year 1693, by Charles Mai-GROT, a doctor of the Sorbonne, who acted as the delegate or vicar of the Roman pontif, in the province of Fokien, and who was afterwards confecrated titular bishop of Conon. This ecclefiaftic. by a public edict, declared the opinions and practices of the Jesuits, in relation to the affairs of the Chinese mission, absolutely inconsistent with the purity and fimplicity of the Christian religion .-But the pope, to whose supreme cognizance and decision MAIGROT had submitted this important edict, edict, refused to come to a determination on ei- CENT. ther fide, before the matter in debate had been SECT. I. carefully examined, and the reasons of the contending parties weighed with the utmost attention; and therefore, in the year 1699, he appointed a congregation of chosen doctors to examine and decide this tedious controversy. This refolution of the Roman pontif was no fooner made public, than all the enemies of the Jefuits, in all quarters of the church of Rome, and more especially those who wished ill to the Order in France, came forth with their complaints, their accusations, and invectives; and loaded the transactions and reputation of the whole fociety with the most bitter reproaches [w]. The Jesuits, on the other hand, were neither filent nor inactive. They attacked their adversaries with vigour, and defended themselves with dexterity and spirit [x]. -But the conclusion of this critical and momentous contest belongs to the history of the following century.

KF [w] See the Lettres de Messieurs des Missions Etrangeres au Pape, sur les Itolatries et les Superstitions Chinosles—Revocation de l'Approbation donnée en 1787, par M. Brisacier, Superiour des Musions Etrangeres, au Liwre de la Desins des nouveaux Chretiens et des Missionaires de la Chine.—Deux Lettres d'un Desseur de l'Ordre de St. Dominique au R. P. Dez, Provincial des Jesaits, sur les Ceremonies de la Chine. These tracks are all printed together in one volume 12°, without any date, or name of the place where published, though the treatises themselves are all dated 1700. N.

[x] Du Halde, Description des la Chine, tom. iii. p. 142.—See the enumeration of other writers on the same subject, given by Fabricius, in his Lux Evangelii toti Orbi exoriens, cap. xxxix. p. 665.—See also Voltaire, Siecle de Louis XIV., tom. ii. p. 318.—But the most ingenious patron of the Jestits, on this occasion was Father Daniel, himself a member of that famous order: see his Histoire Apologatique de la Conduite des Jesuites de la Chine, in the third volume of his Ophscules, p. 1.

XVII. SECT. I. The fubicat of the difpute between the Chinefe Missionaries reducible to two great points:

CENT.

XIII. If, in confidering this controverfy, which employed the ablest pens of the Romish church, we confine our attention to the merits of the cause (passing over what personally concerns the Jesuits, with some other questions of a minute and incidental kind), it will appear, that the whole dispute turns effentially upon two great points; the one relating to the Chinese notion of the Supreme Being; and the other to the nature of those honours, which that people offered to certain persons deceased.

First point.

As to the first of these points, it is to be obferved, that the Chinese call the supreme object of their religious worship TIEN and SHANG-TI, which, in their language, fignify the Heavens; and that the Jesuits employ the same terms when they fpeak of the true God, who is adored by the Christians. From hence it is inferred, that they make no fort of distinction between the supreme God of the Chinese, and the infinitely perfect Deity of the Christians; or (to express the same thing in other words) that they imagine the Chinese entertain the same notions concerning their TIEN, or Heaven, that the Christians do concerning the God they adore. The question then relative to this first point is properly as follows: "Do "the Chinese understand, by the denominations " above-mentioned, the vifible and material Hea-" vens? or are these terms, on the contrary, em-" ployed by them to represent the Lord of these "Heavens, i. e. an eternal and all-perfect Being. "who prefides over univerfal nature, and, from "heaven, the immediate refidence of his glory, " governs all things with unerring wisdom?" or, to express this question in sewer words, "Do the Chinese mean, by their Tien, such a Diety as the Christians adore?" This question the Jefuits answer in the affirmative. They maintain, that the ancient Chinese philosophers, who had an an accurate knowledge of the great principles of CENT. natural religion, represented the Supreme Being Sect. I. almost under the very same characters that are attributed to him by Christians; and hence they not only allow their Chinese disciples to employ the terms already mentioned, in their prayers to the Deity, and in their religious discourse, but even use these terms themselves, when they pronounce the name of God in their public instructions, or in private conversation. The adversaries of the Jesuits maintain the negative of this question, regard the ancient philosophy of the Chinese as an impure source of blasphemy and impiety, and affirm, that it confounded the Divine Nature with that of the universe. They affert further, that the famous Confucius, whose name and writings are held in fuch veneration by the people of China, was totally ignorant of divine truth, destitute of religious principle, and traced the origin of all things that exist from an internal and inevitable necessity. This contest, concerning the first point that divided the Chinese missionaries, produced a multitude of learned differentions on the manners, laws, and opinions of the ancient inhabitants of China, and gave rife to feveral curious discoveries. But all these were insufficient to ferve the chief purpose they were designed to accomplish, fince they were far from giving a fatisfactory and clear decision of the matter in debate. It still remained a question, which were most to be believed, -the Jesuits or their adverfaries? and the impartial inquirer, after long examination, thought it prudent to trust entirely to neither; fince if it appeared on the one hand, that the TIEN, or fupreme God of the Chinese, was much inferior, in perfection and excellence, to the God of the Christians, it was equally evident, on the other, that this Chinese Deity was looked upon by his worshippers as entirely diftinct point.

Sec. nd

XVII. Stot. I.

CENT. tinct from the material ÆTHER and the visible Heavens.

> XIV. As to the other great point in difpute, it must be previously observed, that the ancient laws of China oblige the natives of that vast region to perform, annually, at a stated time, in honour of their ancestors, certain rites, which feem to be of a religious nature. It is to be obferved further, that it is a custom among the learned to pay likewise, at stated times, to the memory of Confuctus, whom the Chinese consider as the oracle of all wifdom and knowledge, certain marks of veneration that have undoubtedly a religious aspect, and that are, moreover, performed in a kind of temples erected to that great and illustrious philosopher. Hence then ariseth a second question, which is thus proposed: "Are those honours that the Chinese, in general, pay to the memory of their ancestors, "and which the learned, in particular, offer at " the shrine of Confucius, of a civil or facred na-"ture? Are they to be confidered as religious " offerings, or are they no more than political infli-" tutions defigned to promote some public good?" The Jefuits affirm, that the ancient Chinese lawgivers established these rites with no other view than to keep the people in order, and to maintain the tranquillity of the state; and that the Chinese did not pay any religious worship either to the memory of Confucius, or to the departed fouls of their ancestors, but only declared, by the performance of certain rites, their gratitude and respect to both, and their solemn resolution to imitate their virtues and follow their illustrious examples. From hence these missionaries conclude, that the Chinese converts to Christianity might be permitted to perform these ceremonies according to the ancient custom of their country, provided they understood their true nature, and kept al-Ways ways in remembrance the political views with CENT. which they were infittuted, and the civil purposes they were defigned to serve. By this specious account of things, the conduct of the Jesuits is, in fome measure, justified. But let this representation be true or false, it will still remain evident, that, in order to render the Christian cause triumphant in China, fome fuch concessions and accommodations as those of the Tesuits seem almost absolutely necessary; and they who desire the end, must submit to the use of the means [y]. The necessity of these concessions arises from this remarkable circumstance, that by a folemn law, of ancient date, it is politively declared, that no man shall be esteemed a good citizen, or be looked upon as qualified to hold any public office in the state, who neglects the observance of the rites and ceremonies now under confideration. On the other hand, the Dominicans, and the other adversaries of the Jesuits, maintain, that the rites in question form an important branch of the Chinese religion; that the honours paid by the Chinese to Confucius, and to the souls of their ancestors, are not of a civil, but of a religious nature [2]; and confequently, that all who perform

F[y] True: if the means be not either criminal in themfelves, pernicious in their confequences, or of such a nature as to defeat, in a great measure, the benefits and advantages proposed by the end. And it is a very nice and momentous question, whether the concessions pleaded for in behalf of the Chinese converts, by the Jesuits, are not to be ranked among the means here characterised. See the following note.

year, used to be performed before his statue, erected in the great hall or temple that is dedicated to his memory. At present they are performed before a kind of Tablet, placed in the most conspicuous part of the edifice, with the following inscription: The Throne of the Soul of the most Holy and the most Excellent Chief-teacher Confucius. The literati, or learned, celebrate this samous sessions in the following manner:—The chief mandarin of the place exercises the office of priest, and the others discharge the functions of deacons, sub-deacons, and so on. A certain facrifice, called C1, which consists of wine, blood, fruits, &c. is offered, after the worthippers have prepared themselves for this ceremony by falting and other acts of abstinence and mortification. They kneel before the infription, prostrate the body nine times before it, until the head touches the ground, repeat a great variety of prayers; after which the priest, taking in one hand a cup full of wine, and in the other a like cup filled with blood, makes a solemn libation to the deceased, and difmiss the assembly with a blessing. The rites performed by families, in honour of their deceased parents, are pretty much of the fame nature.

CENT. these rites are chargeable with insulting the ma-XVII. sect. I. jesty of God, to whom alone all divine worship is due, and cannot be looked upon as true Christians.

Now in order to know, with certainty, whether this festival and these rites be of a civil or religious nature, we have only to inquire, whether they be the fame with those ceremonies that are performed by the Chinese, in the worship they pay to certain celeftial and terrestrial spirits or genii, which worship is undoubtedly of a religious kind. The learned Leibnitz* undertook to affirm, that the fervices now mentioned were not of the fame kind, and, confequently, that the Jesuits were accufed unjustly. But that great man does not appear to have examined this matter with his usual fagacity and attention: for it is evident, from a multitude of relations every way worthy of credit, and, particularly, from the observations made on the Chinese missions by that learned and candid Franciscan ANTONIO DE S. MARIA +, not only that Confucius was worshipped among the idels, and the celestial and terrestrial spirits of the Chinese, but that the oblations and ceremonies, observed in honour of him, were perfectly the same with those that were performed as acts of worship to these idols and spirits. Those that defire a more ample account of this matter may confult the following authors: Bud #1 Annal. Hiftor. Philof. p. 287. where he treats De Superstities o Demortuorum apud Sinenfes Cultu. - WOLFII Not. ad Cafaubon. p. 342. - NIC. CHAR-Mos, Annot. ad Maigrotti Historiam Cultus Sinenses .- But more especially ARNAUD, Morale Pratique des Jesuites, tom. iii. vi. vii. and a collection of historical relations, published at Cologn, in 8vo, in the year 1700, under the following title: Historia Cultus Sinensium, seu varia Scripta de Cultibus Sinarum inter Vicarios Apostolicos, & P. P. S. I. Controversiis.

^{*} See Praf. Novissim. Sinicarum.

⁺ See vol. ii. Epp. Leibnitz.

This account of matters is fo specious and pro- cent. bable, and the confequences deducible from it are fo natural and just, that the more equitable and impartial among the Jesuits have acknowledged the difficulties that attend the cause they máintain; and taking, at length, refuge in the plea of necessity, allege, that certain evils and inconveniences may be lawfully fubmitted to, when they are requifite in order to the attainment of extensive, important, and falutary purposes.

XV. The ministerial labours of the Romish The state of Christianity missionaries, and, more especially, of the Jesuits, in Japan, were crowned in Japan with furprising success. towards the commencement of this century, and made an incredible number of converts to the Christian religion $\lceil a \rceil$. But this prosperous and hourishing

[a] Two peculiar circumflances contributed to facilitate the progress of the Romith religion in Japan. The first was the uncharitable severity and cruelty of the Japanese priess or bonzas towards the fick and indigent, compared with the humanity, zeal, and beneficence of the missionaries. These bonzas represented the poor and infirm not as objects of pity, but as wretches loaded with the difpleafure of the Gods, and abandoned to prefent and future mifery by the judgments of heaven; and inspired the rich with a contempt and abhorrence of them. The Christian religion, therefore, which declares that poverty and afflictions are often furer marks of the divine favour than grandeur and prosperity, and that the transitory evils which the righteous endure here, shall be crowned with everlafting glory and felicity hereafter, was every way proper to comfort this unhappy class of persons, and could not but meet with a most favourable reception among them. Add to this, that the missionaries were constantly employed in providing them with food, physic, and habitations. A fecond circumstance that was advantageous to Christianity (that is, to such a form of Christianity as the Popish missionaries preached in Japan), was a certain refemblance or analogy between it and fome practices and fentiments that prevailed among the Japanese. These Indians look for present and future felicity only through the merits of Xaca Amida, and other of their Deities, who, after a long course of severe mortifications freely undertaken, had voluntarily, also, put an end to their lives. They fainted many melancholy persons who had been guilty of sui-Vol. V.

CENT. flourishing state of the church was somewhat in-XVII.

Sect. I. terrupted by the prejudices that the priefts and grandees of the kingdom had conceived against the new religion, prejudices which proved fatal, in many places, both to those who embraced it, and to those who taught it. The cause of Christianity did not, however, fuffer only from the virulence and malignity of its enemies; it was wounded in the house of its friends, and received, no doubt, fome detriment from the intestine quarrels and contentions of those to whom the care of the rifing church was committed. For the fame scenes of fraternal discord, that had given fuch offence in the other Indian provinces, were renewed in Japan, where the Dominicans, Franciscans, and Augustinians were at perpetual variance with the Jesuits. This variance procide, celebrated their memories, and implored their intercession and good offices. They used processions, statues, candles, and perfumes, in their worship; as also prayers for the dead, and auricular confession; and had monasteries sounded for certain devout persons of both sexes, who lived in celibacy, solitude, and abstinence: so that the Japanese religion was no bad preparation for Popery. Besides these two circumstances, another may be mentioned, which we take from the letters of the Jesuits themselves, who inform us, that the maritime princes of Japan were so fond of this new commerce with the Portugues, that they strove who should oblige them most, and encouraged the missionaries, less perhaps from a principle of zeal, than from views of interest. See Varenus, Descript. Japan. lib. iii. cap. vi. x. Modern Univ. History, vol. ix. p. 24x-edit. 8vo.

duced, on both fides, the heaviest accusations, and the most bitter reproaches. The Jesuits were charged, by the missionaries of the three Orders now mentioned, with insatiable avarice, with shewing an excessive indulgence both to the vices and superstitions of the Japanese, with crafty and low practices unworthy of the ministers of Christ, with an ambitious thirst after

authority

authority and dominion, and other mifdemeanours CENT. of a like nature. These accusations were not SECT. I. only exhibited at the court of Rome, but were fpread abroad in every part of Christendom. The disciples of Loyola were by no means silent under these reproaches; but, in their turn, charged their accusers with imprudence, ignorance of the world, obstinacy, asperity of manners, and a dif-gusting rusticity in their way of living, adding, that these circumstances rendered their ministry rather detrimental than advantageous to the cause of Christianity, among a people remarkable for their penetration, generofity, and magnificences Such then were the contests that arose among the missionaries in Japan; and nothing but the amazing progress that Christianity had already made, and the immense multitude of those that had embraced it, could have prevented these contests from being fatal to its interests. As the case stood, neither the cause of the Gospel, nor its numerous professors, received any essential damage from these divisions; and, if no other circumstance had intervened to stop its progress, an expedient might have probably been found out, either to heal these divisions, or, at least, to appeafe them fo far as to prevent their noxious and fatal confequences $\lceil b \rceil$.

XVI. But a new and dreadful feene of opposi- Its dewarfal tion arose, in the year 1615, to blast the hopes of and extirpathose who wished well to the cause of Christianity in Japan. For, in that year, the emperor iffued out, against the professors and ministers of that divine religion, a perfecuting edict, which was executed with a degree of barbarity unparalleled in the annals of the Christian history. This

^[1] See the writers on this subject enumerated by FABRIcius, in his Lux Evangelii toti Orbi exoriens, p. 678. as also CHARLEVOIX, Histoire de Japon, tom. ii. livr. xi. p. 57.

CENT. cruel persecution raged, during the space of many SECT. I. years, with unrelenting fury, and only ended with the total extinction of Christianity throughout that mighty empire. That religion, which had been fuffered to make fuch a rapid and triumphant progress in Japan, was at length considered as detrimental to the interests of the monarchy, inconfistent with the good of the people, derogatory from the majesty of their high priest, whom they revered as a person descended from the Gods, and, on these accounts, was judged unworthy not only of protection, but even of toleration. This judgment was followed with the fatal Order, by which all foreigners, that were Christians, and more especially the Spanish and Portuguese, were commanded to depart the kingdom; and the natives, who had embraced the Gospel, to renounce the name and doctrine of CHRIST, on pain of death presented to them in the most dreadful forms. This tremendous Order was the fignal for the perpetration of fuch horrors as the most fanguine and atrocious imagination will fcarcely be able to conceive. Innumerable multitudes of the Japanese Christians of each sex, and of all ages, ranks, and flations, expired, with magnanimous conftancy, amidst the most dreadful torments, rather than apostatize from the faith they had embraced. And here it may not be amifs to observe, that both the Jesuits and their adversaries in the missions expiated, in some measure, if I may so express myself, by the agonies they endured, and the fortitude with which they fuffered, the faults they had committed in the exercise of their ministry. For it is well known, that the greatest part of them died magnanimously for the cause of Christ by the hands of the executioner, and that fome of them even expired with triumphant feelings of fatisfaction and joy. Historians

Historians are not entirely agreed with respect C E N T. to the real causes of this merciles persecution. SECT. I. The Jesuits consider it as owing, in part, to the imprudence of the Dominicans and Franciscans; while these latter impute it, in a great measure, to the covetous, arrogant, and factious spirit of the Jesuits $\lceil \epsilon \rceil$. Both parties accuse the English and Dutch of having excited in the emperor of Japan a strong prejudice against the Spaniards, Portuguese, and the Roman pontif, to the end that they alone might engrofs the commerce of that vast monarchy, and be unrivalled in their credit among that powerful people. The English and Dutch allege, on the other hand, that they never attempted to undermine, by any false accufations, the credit of the Roman-catholics in that kingdom, but only detected the perfidious plots the Spaniards had laid against it. Almost all the historians, who have given accounts of this country, unanimously inform us, that certain letters, intercepted by the Dutch, and other circumstances of a very striking and alarming kind, had persuaded the emperor, that the Jesuits, as also the other missionaries, had formed feditious

[[]e] There is a concise and sensible account of this tedious dispute in the fixth discourse that is subjoined to the English edition of Kaemfers's History of Japan, § iv. p. 64—75. But it will also be proper to see what is said on the other side, by an author, who, in his long and circumstantial narration, has not omitted any incident, however minute, that tends, in the least, to disculpate the Jesuits, or to procure them indusence; that author is Charlevolts; see his Historians that may be consulted, with utility, on this subject, are enumerated by Fabricus, in his Lux Evangelii toti Orbi exoriens, cap. x. p. 678. Add to these the Asia Sanstorum, tom. i. Mens. Februar. p. 723. where there is not only a history of the commencement and progress of Christianity in Japan, but also an account of the lives and martyrdom of those who first suffered for the cause of the Gospel in that kingdom. See likewise Mahmachii Origines et Antiquitat. Christian. tom. ii. p. 3;6.

CENT. XVII. SECT. I. defigns against his government, and aimed at nothing less than exciting their numerous disciples to rebellion, with a view to reduce the kingdom of Japan under the dominion of Spain [d]. discovery of this nature could not but make the most dreadful impressions upon a prince naturally fuspicious and cruel, fuch as the emperor then reigning was; and indeed fo it happened; for the moment he received this information, he concluded, with equal precipitation and violence, that he could not fit fecure on his throne, while the fmallest spark of Christianity remained unextinguished in his dominions, or any of its professors breathed under his government. It is from this remarkable period, that we must date the severe edict by which all Europeans are forbidden to approach the Japanese dominions, and in consequence of which all the terrors of fire and fword are employed to destroy whatever carries the remotest aspect or shadow of the Christian doctrine. The only exception to this universal law is made in favour of an handful of Dutch merchants, who are allowed to import annually a certain quantity of European commodities, and have a factory, or rather a kind of prison, allowed them, in one of the extremities of the kingdom, where they are strictly watched, and rigorously confined from all communication with the natives, but what is essentially necessary to the commerce they are permitted to carry on.

Professions in

XVII. The example of the Roman-catholic flates could not but excite a spirit of pious emulation in Protestant countries, and induce them to propagate a still purer form of Christianity ^{$$\}fines$ [d] The discoveries made by the Dutch were against the Portuguese, with whom they were then at war; so that instead of $$\sigma_{pain}$ our author should have said Portugal. See KAEMFFER loe. cit. as also the Universal Modern History, vol. ix. p. 145. note (z) edit. 8vo.

among those unhappy nations that lay groveling C ENT. in the darkness of paganism and idolatry. Ac- SECT. I. cordingly the Lutherans were, on feveral occafions, folicited by persons of eminent merit and rank in their communion, to embark in this pious and generous undertaking. JUSTINIAN ERNEST, baron of WELLS, distinguished himself by the zealous appearance he made in this good cause, having formed the plan of a society that was to be intrusted with the propagation of the Gospel in foreign parts, and that was to bear the name of Jesus, the divine founder of the religion they were to promote [e]. But feveral circumstances concurred to prevent the execution of this pious defign, among which we may reckon, principally, the peculiar fituation of the Lutheran princes, of whom very few have either territories, forts, or fettlements beyond the limits of Europe.

This was by no means the cafe with the princes and states who professed the Reformed religion. The English and Dutch, more especially, whose ships covered the ocean, and failed to the most distant corners of the globe, and who, moreover, in this century, had fent colonies to Afia, Africa, and America, had abundant opportunities of fpreading abroad the knowledge of Christianity among the unenlightened nations. Nor were these opportunities entirely neglected, or misimproved, notwithstanding the reports that have generally prevailed, of their being much more zealous in engroffing the riches of the Indians than in bringing about their conversion; though it may, perhaps, be granted, that neither of these nations exerted themselves, to the extent of their power, in this falutary undertaking. In the year 1647,

[[]e] See Molleri Cimbria Literata, tom. iii. p. 75. as also a German work of the learned Arnold, entitled, Kirchen und Ketzer Historie, part II., book xvii. c. xv. § 23. p. 1066. part III., cap. xv. § 18. p. 150. D 4

SECT. I.

CENT. the propagation of the Gospel in foreign parts was committed, by an act of the English parliament, to the care and inspection of a society composed of persons of eminent rank and merit. The civil wars that enfued suspended the execution of the plans that were laid for carrying on this falutary work. In the year 1661, under the reign of CHARLES II., the work was refumed, and the fociety re-established. In the year 1701, this refpectable fociety received fingular marks protection and favour from King WILLIAM III., who enriched it with new donations and privileges $\lceil f \rceil$. Since that period, even to the prefent time, it has been diftinguished by ample marks of the munificence of the kings of England, and of the liberality of persons of all ranks and orders, and has been, and continues to be, eminently useful in facilitating the means of instruction to the nations that lie in Pagan darkness, and more especially to the Americans. Nor are the laudable efforts of the United Provinces, in the advancement and propagation of Christian knowledge, to be passed over in filence; fince they also are said to have converted to the Gospel a prodigious number of Indians, in the islands of Ceylon and Formofa, the coasts of Malabar, and other Afiatic fettlements, which they either had acquired by their own industry, or obtained by conquest from the Portuguese [g]. Some historians, perhaps, may have exaggerated, in their relations, the numbers of profelytes made by the Dutch; it is nevertheless most certain, that as foon as that nation had got a fufficient footing in the East-Indies, they laid with wisdom, and executed at a great expence, various schemes for c ENT. instructing the natives of those distant regions in the doctrines of the Gospel $\lceil h \rceil$.

[[]f] See Humphreys's Account of the Propagation of the Golpel in Foreign Parts.

[[]g] See Epift. de Successi Evangelii apud Indos Orientales ad Johan. Leusslenium scriptas et Ultrasett. 1699, in 8vo. editas.

XVIII. The inward parts of Africa remain still TheAfrican in the darknefs of Paganism, as they have been hitherto inaccessible to the most adventurous of the Europeans. But in the maritime provinces of that great peninfula, and more especially in those where the Portuguese have their settlements, there are feveral districts in which the religion of Rome has prevailed over the favage superstitions of that barbarous region. It is nevertheless acknowledged, by the more ingenuous historians, even among the Roman Catholics, who have given accounts of the African colonies, that, of the profelytes made there to the Gospel, a very small number deferve the denomination of Christians; fince the greatest part of them retain the abominable superstitions of their ancestors, and the very best among them dishonour their profession by various practices of a most vicious and corrupt nature. Any progrefs that Christianity made in these parts must be chiefly attributed to the zealous labours of the Capuchin missionaries, who, in this century, fuffered the most dreadful hardfhips and difcouragements in their attempts to bring the fierce and favage Africans under the Christian yoke. These attempts succeeded so far, as to gain over to the profession of the Gospel the kings of Benin and Awerri [i], and also to engage the cruel and intrepid ANNA ZINGHA, queen of Metamba, and all her fubjects, to embrace, in the

[i] Called by fome Ouverne.

[[]b] See BRAUN'S Veritable Religion des Hollandois, p. 71. 267, &c. This Treatife, which was published at Amflerdam in the year 1675, was defigned as an answer to a malignant libel of one Stoup, entitled La Religion des Hollandois, in which that writer proposed to perfuade the world that the Dutch had almost no religion at all.

SECT. I.

CENT. year 1652, the Christian faith [k]. The African missions were allotted to this austere Order by the court of Rome, and by the fociety de propaganda fide, for wife reasons; fince none were so proper to undertake an enterprife attended with fuch dreadful hardships, difficulties, and perils, as a fet of men whose monastic institute had rendered familiar to them the feverest acts of mortification, abstinence, and penance, and thus prepared them for the bitterest scenes of trial and adversity. The Capuchins also feem to have been alone honoured with this facred, but arduous commission; nor does it appear that the other Orders beheld, with the smallest fentiment of envy, their dear-bought glory.

The American mif-Cons.

XIX. The extensive continent of America fwarms with colonies from Spain, Portugal, and France [1], all which profess the Christian religion,

[For a more ample account of this Queen, and her conversion, Dr. Mosheim refers the reader (in his note $\lceil r \rceil$) to UR-BAN CERRI'S Etât Present de l' Eglise Romaine, p. 222. and to the third and fourth volumes of Father LABAT'S Relation Historique de l' Afrique Occidentale, in the former of which he tells us, there is a French translation of Ant. GAVAZZI's account of Africa. All these citations are inaccurate. CERRI makes no mention of Zingha, nor of Metamba; nor are they mentioned by LABAT, in any of the five volumes of his Historical Relation, here quoted; nor is GAVAZZi's account translated in that work .- In general it may be observed, that the missions in Africa were greatly neglected by the Portuguese, and that the sew missionaries sent thither were men absolutely void of learning, and destitute almost of every qualification that was necessary to the carrying on fuch an important undertaking. See LABAT's Preface to his Relation Hiftorique de l' Afrique Occidentale; as also the Modern Universal Hiftory, vol. xiv. p. 10, 11. edit. 8vo.

[1] See the authors mentioned by FARRICIUS, in his Lux Evangelii Orbem Terrarum collustrans, cap. xlviii. xlix. p. 769. -There is a curfory account of the state of the Romish religion, in that part of America which is possessed by the European Roman Catholics, in URBAN CERRI'S Etat Prefent de

P Eglise Romaine, p. 245.

as it has been disfigured by the church of Rome. CENT. But it is abundantly known, that these colonists, SECT. I. more especially the Spaniards and Portuguese, are the most worthless and profligate set of men that bear the Christian name; and this fact is confirmed by the testimonies of feveral Roman-Catholic writers of great merit and authority, who cannot be fuspected of partiality in this matter. Nay, the clergy themselves are not excepted in this general condemnation; but, as we learn from the fame credible testimonies, surpass even the idolatrous natives in the ridiculous rites which they perform in the worship of God, as well as in the licentiousness of their manners, and the enormity of the crimes they commit without reluctance. Those of the ancient inhabitants of America, who either have fubmitted to the European yoke, or live near their colonies, have imbibed fome faint knowledge of the Romish religion from the Jefuits, Franciscans, and other ecclesiastics; but thefe feeble rays of inftruction are totally clouded by the gloomy fuggestions of their native superstition, and the corrupt influence of their barbarous customs and manners. As to those Indians who live more remote from the European fettlements, and wander about in the woods without any fixed habitation, they are absolutely incapable either of receiving or retaining any adequate notions of the Christian doctrine, unless they be previously reclaimed from that vagrant manner of life, and civilized by an intercourse with persons, whose humane and infinuating manners are adapted to attract their love, and excite their imitation. This the Jesuits, and other ecclesiastics of different Orders in the church of Rome, who have been fent in later times to convert thefe wandering favages, have found by a conftant and nniform uniform experience $\lceil m \rceil$. Hence the former have erected cities, and founded civil focieties, cemented by government and laws, like the European states, in several Indian provinces both in South and North America; and it is on this account that they discharge the double functions of magistrates and doctors among these their new fubjects and disciples, whose morals and fentiments, it is faid, they endeavour to preferve pure and uncorrupted, by permitting few or no Europeans to approach them $\lceil n \rceil$. These arduous and difficult attempts have furnished to the disciples of Loyola ample matter of boasting, and a lucky occasion of extolling the zeal, the dexterity, and industry of their Order. But it has appeared, from relations worthy of credit, that these exploits of the Jesuits, in the internal and more inaccesfible provinces of America, are not fo much carried on with a view to the propagation of Christianity, as with an intention to gratify their own infatiable avarice and boundless ambition. And, accordingly, they are reported to fend yearly to the members of their Order, in Europe, immense quantities of gold, drawn from feveral American provinces where they have power and property, but chiefly from Paraguay, which belongs to them alone [o].

CENT. XVII. SECT. I.

XX. The

[m] A great variety of facts are alleged as a proof of this, in the Letters in which the French Jefuits gave their friends in Europe an account of the fuccels and fruits of their mislion, and which are regulably published at Paris.

[n] That this was by no means the only, nor even the principal reason of cutting off all communication between the Indians and Europeans, will appear evident from the contents of the following note:

[0] While Father Labat was at Rome, Father Tamburini, at that time general of the Jefuite, asked him several questions relating to the progress of Christianity in America; to which, with equal courage and candour, he gave immediately this general

XX. The cause of Christianity was promoted CENT. with more wisdom, and consequently with better SECT. I. fuccess, in those parts of America where the English formed settlements during this century; and, missions in though

Protestant America.

general answer: "that the Gospel had made little or no real " progress in that country; that he had never met with one " adult person among the Americans who could be esteemed a " true profelyte to Christianity; and that the missionaries " could fearcely pretend to any other exploits (of a spiritual " kind) than their having baptized some children at the point " of death *." He added, at the fame time, " that, in order " to make the Americans Christians, it was previously neces-" fary to make them men." This bold Dominican, who had been himfelf a missionary in the American islands, had a great mind to give TAMBURINI fome feafonable advice concerning the immense wealth and authority that the Jesuits had acquired in these parts of the world; but the cunning old man eluded artfully this part of the conversation, and turned it upon another fubject. LABAT gave, upon another occasion, a still greater proof of his undaunted spirit and presence of mind; for when, in an audience granted him by CLEMENT XI., that pontif praifed, in pompous terms, the industry and zeal of the Portuguese and Spanish missionaries in promoting the falvation of the Americans, and reproached the French with inactivity and indifference in a matter of fuch high importance, our resolute Dominican told him plainly, "that the Spaniards " and Portuguefe boafted of the fuccefs of their labours without any fort of foundation; fince it was well known, that, instead of converts, they had only made hypocrites, all their disciples among the Indians having been forced, by the " dread of punishment and the terrors of death, to embrace "Christianity;" adding moreover, "that such as had receiv-" ed baptifin continued as open and egregious idolators as "they had been before their profession of Christianity +." To this account we might add the relations of a whole cloud of witnesses, whose testimonies are every way worthy of credit, and who declare unanimously the same thing. See, among others, a remarkable piece, entitled, Memoire touchant l'Etablissement considerable des Peres Jesuites dans les Indes d' Espagne, which is subjoined to FREZIER's Relation du Voyage de la Mer du Sud, p. 577. See also Voyage aun Indes Occidentales, par Franc. Coreal, tom. ii. p. 67. 43. and Mamma-CHIUS, Orig. et Antiquit. Christian. tom. ii. p. 337. There

^{*} See LABAT, Voyage en Espagne et en Italie, tom. viii. p. 7.

[†] Id. ib. tom, viii. p. 12.

c E N T. though it had the greatest ignorance, stupidity, SECT. I. and indolence to conquer, made, in a little time, a considerable progress. The English Independents, who retired to America on account of their differsion is a particular account of the Jesuits of Paraguay given by DON ULLOA, in his Voyage d' Amerique, tom. I. p. 540; but this account is partial in their favour. They are also zealously and artfully defended in an account of the miffion of Paraguay, published by MURATORI in the year 1743. When Dr. Mosherm wrote this note, the important discovery that placed the ambitious, despotic, and rebellious proceedings of the Jefuits in Paraguay in the plainest and most striking light, had not been yet made. The book of MURATORI, which was published at Venice in the year 1743, and republished in a French translation at Paris in 1754 *, deceived, for some time, the over-credulous, nay, induced even the enemies of the Jefuits to suspect that their conduct at Paraguay was not so criminal as it had been represented. So that, notwithstanding the accufations that had been brought against these missionaries by the writers mentioned by Dr. Mosheim; notwithstanding a memorial fent to the court of Spain in the year 1730, by DON MARTIN DE BARUA, at that time Spanish governor of Paraguay, in which the Jefuits are-charged with the most ambitious projects and the most rebellious designs, represented as fetting up an independent government, accused of carrying on a prodigious trade, and other things of that nature; and notwithstanding the circumstantial evidence of various known facts that supported these accusations in the strongest manner: notwithitanding all this, the public was more or lefs deceived. The illusion, however, did not last long. In the year 1750, the courts of Madrid and Lisbon entered into a treaty for fixing the limits of their respective dominions in South-America. Jesuits, who had formed an independent republic in the heart of these dominions, composed of the Indians, whom they had gained by the infinuating fortness and affected mildness, humility, and generofity of their proceedings, were much alarmed at this treaty. It was one of the fundamental laws of this new state (which was founded under the mask of a Christian mission), that neither bishop, governor, nor any officer, civil, military, or ecclefiaftical, nay, nor even any individual, Spaniard or Portuguese, should be admitted into its territories, to diffention from the established religion of their cent. country, claimed the honour of carrying thither S_{ECT} . I, the first rays of divine truth, and of beginning a work that has been fince continued with fuch pious zeal and fuch abundant fruit; and indeed this claim is founded in justice. Several families of this fect, that had been fettled in Holland, rethe end that the proceedings and projects of the Jesuits might ftill remain an impenetrable fecret. The members of their order were alone to be instructed in this profound and important mystery. The use of the Spanish language was prohibited throughout the extent of this new territory, in order to prevent more effectually all communication between the Indians and that nation. The Indians were trained to the use of arms, furnished with artillery, instructed in the art of war, taught to behold the Jefuits as their fovereigns and their Gods, and to look upon all white people, except the Jefuits, as demoniacs, atheifts, and, moreover, as their barbarous and mortal enemies. Such was the flate of things when, in the year 1752, the united troops of Spain and Portugal marched towards the eaftern borders of the river Uragai, to make the exchanges of certain villages that had been agreed upon in the treaty above mentioned. Upon this the Jefuits, not being fufficiently prepared for their defence, demanded a delay of the execution of the treaty under various pretexts. This delay was granted: but as the Spanish General, Gomez Freire Andrada, perceived that thefe Holy Fathers employed this delay in arming the Indians, and confirming them in their rebellion, he wrote to his court, and received new orders from thence to proceed to the execution of the treaty. A war enfued between the Spanish and Portuguese on one fide, and the Indians, animated by the Jesuits, on the other, in which the Spanish General lost his life, and of which the other circumstances are well known. This was the real and original cause of the disgrace of the Jefuits at the court of Partugal. Those who defire a more particular account of this matter will find it in a famous pamphlet, drawn from an authentic memorial, published by the court of Lifbon, and printed at the Hague, in the year 1758, under the following title: La Republique des Jesuites au Paraguny ren-versée, ou Relation Authentique de la Guerre que ces Religieux ont ofé foutenir contre les Monarques d' Espagne et de Portugal en Amerique, pour y defendre les domaines dont ils avoient usurpé le Soveraineté au Paraguay fous pretente de Religion.

^{*} Muratori's account of the Mission of Paraguay was translated from the French edition into English, and published in Svo in the year 1759.

SECT. I.

C F N T. moved from thence into America [p] in the year 1620, in order, as they alleged, to transmit their doctrine pure and undefiled to future ages; and there they laid the foundations of a new state $\lceil q \rceil$. The fuccess that attended this first emigration engaged great numbers of the people called Puritans, who grouned under the oppression of the bishops, and the feverity of a court, by which this oppression was authorised, to follow the fortunes of these religious adventurers $\lceil r \rceil$; and this produced a fecond emigration in the year 1629. But notwithstanding the fuccess that in process of time crowned this enterprize, its first beginnings were unpromising, and the colonists, immediately after their arrival, laboured under fuch hardships and difficulties in the dreary and uncultivated wilds of this new region, that they could make but little progress in instructing the Indians: their whole zeal and industry being scarcely sufficient to preferve the infant fettlement from the horrors of famine. But towards the year 1633 [s], things put on a better aspect: the colony began to flourish, and the new-comers, among whom the Puritans Mayhew, Sheppard, and Elliot, made an eminent figure, had the leifure, courage, and tranquillity of mind, that were necessary to the execution of fuch an important and arduous defign. All these devout exiles were remarkably zealous, laborious, and fuccefsful in

8

[[]p] This colony fettled in that part of America that was afterwards called New Plymouth.

[[]q] Sec NEAL'S Hiftory of the Puritans, vol. ii. p. 128 .-As also a German work, entitled, Ant. Wilh. Bohm, Englische Resormations Historie, b. vi. c. v. p. 807.

[[]r] See MATHER'S Hiftory of New England, p. 126 .- NEAL'S

History of the Puritans, vol. ii. p. 208.

[[]s] Dr. Mosheim fays in the year 1623, but this is probably an error of the press; fince it is well known, that the emigration of Skeppard and Elliot happened between 1631 and 1634.

the conversation of the Indians; But none ac- C E N T-quired such a shining reputation, in this pious sect. career, as John Elliot, who learned their language, into which he translated the BIBLE, and other instructive and edifying books, gathered together the wandering favages, and formed them into regular congregations, inftructed them in a manner fuited to the dulness of their comprehenfion, and the measure of their respective capacities; and, by fuch eminent displays of his zeal, dexterity, and indefatigable industry, merited, after his death, the honourable title of the Apostle of the Indians [t].

The unexpected fuccess that attended these pious attempts towards the propagation of Christian knowledge, drew the attention of the parliament and people of England; and the further advancement of this good cause appeared an object of fufficient importance to employ the deliberations, and to claim the protection of the great council of the nation. Thus was formed that illuffrious fociety, which derives its title from the great purpose of its institution, even the Propagation of the Gofpel in foreign parts, and which, in proportion to the increase of its number, influence, revenues, and prerogatives, has still renewed and augmented its efforts for the instruction of the Pagans in all parts of the world, particularly those on the American continent. It is true, that after all its efforts, much is yet to be done; but it is also true, and must be acknowledged by all that have examined these matters

^[1] HORNBECKIUS, De Converfione Indorum et Gentil. lib. ii. cap. xv. p. 260.—CRESCENTII MATHERI Epifoia de Sucsefia Evangelli apud Indos Occidentales ad Joh. Lenfagnica, Traject. 1699, in 8vo. Fincrease Mather's Letter to Levylen is translated into English, and inferted into Cotton Mather's Life of Eiliet, p. 94. 3d London edit, and in his History of New England, book III. p. 194. N.

CENT. with attention and impartiality, that much has SECT. I. been done, and that the pious undertakings of this respectable society have been followed with unexpected fruit. With respect to the province of Pennsylvania, which receives in its bosom, without distinction, persons of all sects and all opinions, we shall have occasion to speak of its religious state in another place. The American provinces that were taken from the Portuguese by the Dutch, under the command of Count MAURICE of Nasfau, became immediately an object of the pious zeal of their new masters, who began, with great ardour and remarkable fuccefs, to spread the light of the Gospel among the wretched inhabitants of those benighted re-gions [u]. But this fair prospect was afterwards clouded in the year 1644, when the Portuguese recovered the territories they had loft. As to the Dutch colony that is fettled in Surinam, we cannot fay much, having never received the finallest information of any attempts made by them to instruct the neighbouring Indians in the knowledge of Christianity [w].

The enemies of Christianity in Englana.

XXI. Religion in general, and the Christian religion in particular, had many enemies to encounter in this century, though their number has been studiously diminished in the accounts of fome, and greatly exaggerated in the representations of others. The English complain of the reign of CHARLES II. as the fatal period, when corruption of manners, and vice, in the most licentious and profligate forms, over-ran their na-

[w] There are three churches in that fettlement for the use of the colonits; but no attempt has been made to spread the knowledge of the Cofpel among the natives.

tion,

^[1] Jo. Henr. Hottingeri Topographia Ecclefiastica, p. 47.—Janicon, Etat Present des Provinces Unies, tom. i. p. 396. The same author gives an account of Surinam, and of the state of religion in that colony, chap. xiv. p. 407.

tion, engendered a fpirit of fcepticism and infi- CENT. delity, and formed a fet of unhappy men, who SECT. Lemployed all the wantonness of inconsiderate wit, all the fallies of imagination, and even all the force of real talent and genius, to extinguish a fense of religion in the minds of mankind. That this complaint is far from being groundless, appears, on the one hand, from the number of those writers among the English, whose productions were levelled either against all religion, or designed to confine the belief of men to natural religion alone; and, on the other, from the still fuperior number of learned and ingenious treatifes, in which the divinity, dignity, and intrinfic excellence of the Gospel, were demonstrated and displayed in the most striking and conspicuous manner. But nothing is more adapted to confirm the accounts that have been given of the progress of infidelity and licentiousness at the period now under confideration, than the famous Lectures, founded by that illustrious ornament of religion and humanity Mr. ROBERT BOYLE, who, in the year 1691, confecrated a confiderable part of his large fortune to the fervice of Christianity, by leaving, in his last will, a fum to be distributed, fuccessively, to a number of learned divines, who were to preach, in their turns, eight fermons every year, in defence of natural and revealed religion [x]. This pious and honourable task has [[]x] See Ricotier's Preface to his French translation of Dr. Clarre's Difourfes on the Being and Attributes of God. For an account of the pious, learned, and illustrious Mr. Boyle, fee Budgell's Memoirs of the Lives and Charceters of the illustrious Family of the Boyles, published in 8vo at London, in the year 1737.—See also the Bibliotheque Britannique, com. xii. p. 144. © But, above all, the late learned Dr. Birch's Life of Boyle, published in 8vo in the year 1744; and that very valuable Collection of Lives, the Biographia Britannica, Article Boyle (Robert) note [z]. See also Article Hobbes, in the same collection. N.

 $^{\text{C}}$ E $^{\text{N}}$ T. been committed always to men of the most emisser. I. nent genius and abilities, and is still undertaken with zeal, and performed with remarkable dignity and fuccess. The discourses that have been delivered in confequence of this admirable inftitution have been always published; and they form at this day a large and important collection, which is known throughout all Europe, and has done eminent fervice to the cause of religion and virtue [y].

Hobbes, Rochefter. Sec.

XXII. The leader of the impious band in England, which, fo early as the reign of CHARLES II., attempted to obscure the truth, and to dissolve the folemn obligations of religion, was Thomas Hobbes of Malmesbury, -- a man whose audacious pride was accompanied with an uncommon degree of artifice and address, whose fagacity was fuperior to his learning, and whose reputation was more owing to the fubtilty and extent of his genius, than to any progress he had made either in facred or profane erudition [z]. This man, notwithstanding the pernicious nature and tendency of his principles, had feveral adherents in England; and not only fo, but has found, in foreign countries, more than one apologist, who, though they acknowledge that his fentiments were erroneous, yet deny that he went fuch an

[2] See BAYLE'S Didionary, at the article Hobbes .-Wood's Athena Oxonienses, vol. ii. p. 641. last edition.

[[]y] There is a complete lift of these learned discourses in the Bibliotheque Angloife, tom. xv. part II. p. 416 .- The late Reverend Mr. GILBERT BURNET published in four volumes in Svo, a judicious, comprehensive, and well-digested Abridgment of fuch of the BOYLE's Ledures as had been preached before the year 1737. This abridgment, which has been translated into the French and German languages, comprehends the difcourses of Bentley, Kidder, Williams, Gastrell, Harris, Bradford, Blackhall, Stanbope, Clarke, Hancock, Whiston, Turner, Butler, Woodward, Derham, Ibbot, Long, J. Clarke, Gurdon, Burnet, Berriman.

Sест. I.

impious length as to introduce the disbelief, or to CENT. overturn the worship of a Supreme Being [a]. But if it should be granted, on the one hand, that Hobbes was not totally deflitute of all fense of a Deity, nor of all impressions of religion; yet it must be allowed, on the other, by all who peruse his writings, with a proper degree of attention, that his tenets lead, by natural confequences, to a contempt of religion and of divine worship; and that, in fome of his productions, there are visible marks of an extreme aversion to Christianity. It has, indeed, been faid of him, that, being advanced in years, he returned to a better mind, and condemned publicly the opinions and tenets he had formerly entertained [b]; but how far this recantation was fincere, we shall not pretend to determine, fince the reality of his repentance has been greatly questioned.

The

[a] Among the patrons and defenders of Hobbes, we may reckon Nic. HIER. GUNDLINGIUS, in his Observationes Seletta, tom. i. n. ii. p. 30. and in his Gundlingiana, p. 304. and also Arnold, in his German work entitled, Kirchen und Ketzer Historie, p. II. b. xvii. c. xvi. § 25. p. 1082 .- These writers are refuted by the learned Bubæus, in his Thefes de Atheismo et Superstitione, cap. 1. p. 187.

[b] This recantation of HOBBES depends upon the testimony of Wood, in his Athena Oxonienses, vol. ii. p. 646. This writer informs us, that Hobbes composed an apology for himfelf and his writings, in which he declared, that the opinions he had published in his Leviathan were by no means conformable to his real fentiments: that he had only proposed them as a matter of debate, to exercise his mind in the art of reafoning: that, after the publication of that book, he had never maintained them either in public or in private, but had left them entirely to the judgment and decision of the church: more especially, that the tenets, in this and his other writings, that feemed inconfishent with the doctrines concerning God and religion that are commonly received, were never delivered by him as truths, but proposed as questions, that were decided by divines and eccletialtical judges endued with a proper authority. Such is the account that Wood gives of the apology now under confideration; but he does not tell us the year

E 3

CENT. The fame thing cannot be faid of John Wilser. I mot, earl of Rochester, who had infulted the The fame thing cannot be faid of JOHN WILmajesty of God, and trampled upon the truths of religion and the obligations of morality with a profane fort of frenzy, that far furpassed the impiety of Hobbes, but whose repentance and conversion were also as palpable as had been his folly, and much more unquellionable than the dubious recantation of the philosopher of Malmefeury. Rochester was a man of uncommon fagacity and penetration, of a fine genius, and an elegant taste; but these natural talents were accompanied with the greatest levity and licentiousness, and the most impetuous propensity to unlawful pleafures. So that, as long as health enabled him to answer the demands of passion, his life was an uninterrupted feene of debauche-> year in which it was published, which is a proof that he himfelf had never feen it, nor does he inform us whether it appeared during the life of Hobbes, or after his death. As indeed it is placed in the catalogue of his writings, with a date posterior to the year 1682, it is natural to suppose that it was not published during his life, fince he died in the year 1679. It is, therefore, no easy matter to determine what sircis is to be laid upon this recantation of Hobbes, or what fentiments we are to form concerning his supposed repentance. That the apology under confideration exists, we do not pretend to deny; but it may possibly have been composed by some of his friends, to diminish the edium that, it was natural to think, his licentious principles would caft on his memory. But f culd it be granted, that it was drawn up and published by HOBBES himfelf, even this concession would contribute but little to fave, or rather to receiver, his reputation: fince it is well known, that nothing is more common among those who, b, spreading corrupt principles and permisions opinions, have diawn upon themicives the just indignation of the public, than, like Hobbes, to deceive the world by infidious and infincere declarations of the foundness of their belief, and the uprightness of their intention. It is thus that they secure them elves against the execution of the laws that are defigned to fence religion, while they perfevere in their licentious fentiments, and propagate them, wherever they can do it with fecurity.

ry [c]. He was, however, fo happy in the last c E N T. years of a very short life, as to see the extreme folly and guilt of his past conduct, in which salutary view he was greatly affished by the wise and pathetic reasonings and exhortations of doctor Burnet, afterwards bishop of Sarum. This conviction of his guilt produced a deep contrition and repentance, an ardent recourse to the mercy of God, as it is manifested in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and a sincere abhorrence of the offences he had committed against the Best of Beings. In these pious sentiments he departed this life in the year 1680 [d].

In this lift we may also place Anthony Ashley Cooper, earl of Shaftesbury, who died of a confumption at Naples in the year 1703; not that this illustrious writer attacked openly and professed the Christian religion, but that the most feducing strokes of wit and raillery, the most enchanting eloquence, and the charms of a genius, in which amenity, elegance, copiousness, and elevation were happily blended, rendered him one of its most dangerous, though secret enemies; nay, so much the more dangerous, because his opposition was carried on under a mask. His works have been published, and have passed through several editions. They are remarkable for beauty of diction, and contain very noble and sublime senti-

[c] See an account of his life and writings in Wood's Athena Oxonicnfer, vol. ii. p. 654.—His poetical genius is juffly celebrated by Voltaire, in his Melarges de Literature et de Philosophie, chap. xxxiv. vol. iv. of his works.

[[]d] Bishop Burnet has given a particular account of this last and very affecting scene of the life of this nobleman, in a pamphlet written expressly on that subject, and entitled, Some Passages of the Life and Death of John Earl of Rochester, written, at his destre, on his death-bed, by Gilbert Burnet, D. D. containing more amply their Conversations on the great Principles of Natural and Revealed Religion.

CENT. ments; but ought to be read with the utmost sect. I caution, as extremely dangerous to unexperienced, youthful, and unwary minds [e]. The brutal

[e] His works were first collected and published under the title of Charaterifies, in three volumes in 8vo. in the year 1711, and, fince that time, have peffed through feveral editions. See LE CLERC's account of them in his Bibliotheque Ghoife, tom. xxiii. The learned and ingenious Leibnitz's Critical Reflections on the Philosophy of Lord SHAFTESBURY were published by Des Maizeaux, in the second volume of his Recucil des diverses Picces sur la Philosophie, p. 245.—There are forme writers who maintain, that this noble philosopher has been unjufily charged, by the greatest part of the clergy, with a contempt for revealed religion; and it were to be wished, that the arguments they employ to vindicate him from this charge were more fatisfactory and folid than they really are. But, if I am not much midaken, whoever perufes his writings, and more especially his famous letter concerning Entholiafm, will be inclined to adopt the judgment that has been formed of him by the ingenious Dr. BERKLEY, late bishop of Cloyne, in his Alciphron, or the Minute Philosopher, vol. i. p. 200 .- Nothing is more easy than to observe, in the writings of Lord Shaftesbury, a spirit of raillery, mingling itself with even those of his reflexions upon religious subjects that form to be delivered with the greatest seriousness and gravity. But, at the fame time, this unformly mixture of the lolemn and the ludicrous renders it difficult for those that are not well acquainted with his manner, to know whether the man is in jest or in earnest. It may also be added, that this author has perniciously endeavoured to destroy the influence and effieacy of feme of the great motives that are proposed in the Hely Scriptures to render men virtuous, by reprefenting thefe motives as mercenary, and even turning them into ridicule. He fubilitates, in their place, the intrinsic excellence and beauty of virtue as the great fource of moral obligation, and the true incentive to virtuous decde. But however alluring this fublime scheme of morals may appear to certain minds of a refined, elegant, and ingenuous turn, it is certainly little adapted to the tafte, the comprehension, and character of the multitude. Take away from the lower orders of mankind the profp. A of reward and punishment, that leads them to virtue and obsdience, by the powerful fuggestions of hope and fear, and the great happy to of virtue, and the most effectual motives to the purfing of it, will be then removed with respect to them.

CY Since Dr. Moshrim wrote this note, the very learned and judenous Dr. Leband published his View of the principal Desilical tal rusticity and uncouth turn of John Toland, a cerular native of Ireland, who, towards the conclusion of this century, was rendered infamous by feveral injurious libels against Christianity, must naturally appear doubly disgusting, when compared with the amiable elegance and specious refinement of the writer now mentioned. However, as those writers, who slatter the passions by endeavouring to remove all the restraints that religion imposes upon their excessive indulgence, will never want patrons among the licentious part of mankind; so this man, who was not destitute of learning, imposed upon the ignorant and unwary; and, notwithstanding the excess of his Deiftical Writers that have appeared in England during the last and prefint Century, &c. in which there is a full account of the Free-thinkers and Deifts mentioned by our historian, and a review of the writings of the Earl of Shaftesbury. This review merits a particular attention, as it contains an impartial account, an accurate examination, and a fatisfactory relatation, of the erroneous principles of that great man. Lord SHAFTESBURY, like all other eminent innovators, has been mifreprefented both by his friends and his enemies. Dr. LE-LAND has deered a middle course, between the blind enthufialm of the former, and the partial malignity of the latter. He points out, with fingular penetration and judgment, the errors, inconfiltencies, and contradictions, of that illustrious author; does justice to what is good in his ingenious writings; feparates carefully the wheat from the chaff; and neither approves nor condemns in the hump, as too many have done. In a more particular manner he has shewn, with his usual perspicuity and good sense, that the being influenced by the hope of the reward promiled in the Gofpel has nothing in it difingenuous and flaville, and is fo far from being inconfiftent with loving virtue for its own fake, that it tends, on the contrary, to heighten our effeem of its amiableness and worth. The triumphant manner in which the learned Dr. WARBUR-TON has refuted SHAFTLOBURY's representation of raillery and ridicule as a ted of truth, is too well known to be mentioned here. See also Dr. Brown's Three Effays on the Charatteriflus, in which that sensible caunor treats of Ridicule, considered as a Test of Trues; of the obligations of men to virtue, and of the necessity of religious principle, and of revealed religion and Christianity.

arrogance

CENT. XVII. EFCT. I.

arrogance and vanity, and the shocking rudeness and ferocity of his manners, acquired a certain measure of same [f]. It is not necessary to mention

[f] Dr. Moshfim quotes here, in a short note, an account he had given of the Life and Writings of Toland, prefixed to his confutation of the Nazarenus of that contemptible author. He also quotes a Life of Toland, prefixed to his posthumous works, printed in 8vo at London, in 1726, by DES MAIZEAUX .- Dr. Mosheim fays, that this man was not deflitute of learning. Should that be granted, it must, nevertheless, be acknowledged, that this learning lay quite indigefled in his head, and that the use he made of it in his works was equally injudicious and impudent. His conference with M. BEAUSOBRE concerning the authenticity of the Holy Scriptures, which was held at Berlin, in the year 1701, in presence of the queen of Pruffer, and in which he made fuch a despicable figure, is a proof of the former; and his writings to all but half-feholars and half-thinkers will be a proof (as long as they endure) of the latter .- It is remarkable that, according to that maxim of Juvenal, Wemo refents fut turpiffmus, TOLAND arrived only gradually, and by a progressive motion, at the fummit of insidelity. His first step was Socialianism, which appeared in his book entitled, Christianity not myslerious. This book procured him hard treatment from the Irith Parliament; and was answered by Mr. BROWN, afterwards Bishop of Corke, who, unhappily, did not think good arguments fufficient to maintain a good cause, unless they were seconded by the secular arm, whose ill placed succours he solicited with ardor. The second step that TOLAND made in the devious fields of religion was in the publication of his Anyator, which, in appearance, was defigned to vindicate what he advanced in his Life of Milton, to prove that king Charles I. was not the real author of the Eikon B. filike, but, in reality, was intended to invalidate the Canon of the New Testament, and to render it uncertain and precarious. This piece, in as far as it attacked the authenticity of the Holy Scriptures, was answered in a triumphant manner by Dr. CLARKE, in his Reflections on that part of the Book called AMYNTOR, which relates to the writings of the Primitive Fathers, and the Canon of the New Teffament; by Mr. RICHARDSON, in his learned and judicious Vindication of the Canon of the N.w T.fament; and by Mr. Jones, in his new and full Method of feeling the Canonical Authority of the New Teffament. These learned writers have exposed, in the most firiking manner, the diffingenuity, the blunders, the false quotations, the infidious fictions and ridiculous mistakes of Tosand, who, on various accounts, may pale for one of the most harmlefs mention other authors of this class, who appear- C ENT. ed in England during this century, but are long SECT. I fince configned to oblivion; the reader may, however, add to those that have been already named, Lord HERBERT of CHERBURY, a philofopher of some note, who, if he did not absolutely deny the divine origin of the Gospel [g], harmless writers against the Christian religion. For an account of the Adeifidamon, the Nazarenus, the Letters to Serena, the Pantheifticon, and the other irreligious works of this author, with the excellent answers that have been made to them, see his Life in the General Dictionary, or rather in Chaufeipied's Supplement to Bayle's Dictionary, entitled, Nouveau Dictionaire Historique et Critique, as this author has not only translated the articles added to BAYLE's Diffionary by the English editors of that work, but has augmented and improved them by feveral interesting anecdotes drawn from the Literary History of the Continent.

[g] Lord HERBERT did not pretend to deny the divinity of the Gofpel; he even declared, that he had no intention to attack Christianity, which he calls, in express terms, the Best Religion, and which, according to his own confession, tends to effablish the five great articles of that universal, sufficient, and absolutely persect religion, which he pretends to deduce from reason and nature. But notwithstanding these fair professions, his lordship loses no occasion of throwing out infinuations against all revealed religion, as absolutely uncertain, and of little or no use. But this fame deift, who was the first, and, indeed, the least contemptible of that tribe in England, has left upon record one of the strongest instances of fanaticism and abfundity that perhaps ever has been heard of, and of which he himself was guilty. This instance is preserved in a manuscript life of Lord HERBERT, drawn up from memorials penned by himfelf, which is now in the peffettion of a gentleman of diffinction, and is as follows: That lord having finished his book De Veritate, apprehended that he should meet with much opposition, and was, confequently, dubious for fome time whether it would not be prudent to suppress it. " Being thus doubtful, fays his lord/hip, in my chamber (ct " Paris, where he was ambaffador in the year 1624), one fair " day in the fummer, my cafement being open towards the " fouth, the fun shining clear, and no wind stirring, I took " my book De Veritate in my hands, and, kneeling on my " knees, devoatly faid these words: O thou Eternal God, au-" ther of this light that now shines upon me, and giver of all inCENT. maintained, at least, that it was not effentially SECT. I. necessary to the falvation of mankind[b]; and CHARLES BLOUNT, who composed a book, en-

" ward illuminations, I do befeech thee, of thine infinite goodness, " to pardon a greater request than a sinner ought to make: I am " not satisfied enough whether I shall publish this book; if it be "for thy glory, I before there to give me fome SIGN FROM HEAVEN; if not, I shall supports it." What does the reader now think of this corner-stone of Deifm, who demands a supernatural revelation from heaven in favour of a book that was defigned to prove all revelation uncertain and ufeless? But the abfurdity does not end here, for our Deist not only fought for this revelation, but also obtained it, it we are to believe him. Let us, at least, hear him. " I had no fooner, fays ke, fpoken thefe " words, but a loud, though yet gentle noise came forth from " the heavens (for it was like nothing on earth), which " did fo cheer and comfort me, that I took my petition as " granted." Rare credulity this in an unbeliever! but thefe gentlemen can believe even against reason, when it answers their purpose. His lordship continues, "This, however " strange it may feem, I protest, before the Eternal God, is " true; neither am I superstitiously deceived herein," &c. See LELAND's View of the Deiftical Writers, &c. vol. i. p.

470, &c.

[b] This is fufficiently known to those who have perused Lord Herbert's book De Caufis Errorum, as also his celebrated work De Religione Gentilium. This author is generally confidered as the chief and founder of the fect or fociety that are called Naturalists, from their attachment to Natural Religion alone. See Arnold Historia Ecclesiastica et Haret. part II. p. 1083 .- The peculiar tenets of this famous Deift have been refuted by Musæus and Kortholt, two German divines of eminent learning and abilities .- CF GASSENDI also composed an answer to Lord HERBERT's book De Veritate. In England it was refuted by Mr. RICHARD BAKTER, in a treatife entitled, More Reasons for the Christian Religion, and no Reason against it. Mr. LOCKE, in his Essay on Human Understanding, shews, with great perspicuity and force of evidence, that the Five Articles of Natural Religion proposed by this noble author are not, as he reprefents them, Common Notices, clearly inscribed by the hand of God in the minds of all men, and that a Divine Revelation is necessary to indicate, develope, and enforce them. Dr. WHITBY has also treated the fame matter amply in his learned work, entitled, The Necessity and Ufefuluefs of the Christian Revelation, by reason of the Corruptions of the Principles of Natural Religion among the Jews and Heathens, 8vo, 1705.

titled, The Oracles of Reason, and, in the year CENT.

1693, died by his own hand [i].

SECT. I.

XXIII. Infidelity and even Atheifm shewed themselves also on the continent during this cen- Rugger, tury. In France, Julius CESAR VANINI, the au- Leizyniki, thor of two books, the one entitled, The Amphitheatre of Providence [k], and the other, Dialogues concerning Nature [1], was publicly burnt at Tholouse in the year 1629, as an impious and obstinate Atheist. It is nevertheless to be observed, that feveral learned and respectable writers consider this unhappy man rather as a victim to bigotry and envy, than as a martyr to implety and Atheifm, and maintain, that neither his life nor

[i] See Chaufferied, Nouveau Distionaire Historique et Crit. though this author has omitted the mention of this gentleman's unhappy fate, out of a regard, no doubt, to his illustrious family. O Mr. CHAUFFEPIED has done no more than translated the article CHARLES BLOUNT from that of the English continuators of BAYLE.

[k] This book was published at Lyons in the year 1515, was approved by the clergy and magistrates of that city, and contains many things abfolutely irreconcilable with atheiftical principles: its title is as follows: Amphitheatrum Eternæ Providentia, Divino-Magicum, Christiano-Physicum, Astrologico-Catholicum, adversus Veteres Philosophos, Atheos, Epicareos, Peripateticos, Stoicos, &c. This book has been esteemed innocent by feveral writers, impious by others, but, in our judgment, it would have escaped reproach, and VANINI published none of his other productions, since the impicties it may contain, according to the intention of its author, are carefully concealed. This is by no means the case of the book mentioned in the following note.

[1] This book, concerning the Secrets of Queen Nature the Goddess of Mortals, was published with this suspicious title at Paris, in the year 1616, and contains glaring marks of impiety and atheifm; and yet it was published with the king's permission, and the approbation of the Faculty of Theology at Paris. This scandalous negligence or ignorance is unaccountble in fuch a reverend body. The Jefuit GARASSE pretends that the faculty was deceived by VANINI, who substituted another treatife in the place of that which had been approved. See a wretched book of GARASSE, entitled, Dollrine Curienfe, p.

998. as also Durand, Vie de Vanini, p. 116.

CENT. his writings were fo abfurd or blasphemous as to SECT. I. entitle him to the character of a despifer of God and religion [m]. But if VANINI had his apologists, this was by no means the case of Cosmo RUGGERI, a native of Florence, whose Atheism was as impudent as it was impious, and who died in the most desperate sentiments of irreligion at Paris in the year 1615, declaring, that he looked upon all the accounts that had been given of the existence of a Supreme Being and of evil spirits as idle dreams [n]. Casimir Leszynski, a Polish knight, was capitally punished, suffering death at Warfaw, in the year 1689, for denying the Being and Providence of God; but whether or no this accusation was well founded, can only be known by reading his trial, and examining the nature and circumstances of the evidence that was produced against him [o]. In Germany, a fenfeless and frantic fort of a man, called MAT-THEW KNUTZEN, a native of Holftein, attempted to found a new fect, whose members, laying aside all confideration of God and Religion, were to follow the dictates of reason and conscience alone, and from thence were to assume the title of Conscientiarians. But this wrong-headed fectary was eafily

[[]m] See Bud xus's Thefes de Atheismo et Superstitione, p. 120. The author of the Apologia pro Vanino, which appeared in Holland in the year 1712, is Peter Frederick Arp, a learned lawyer, who, in his Feria aftivales feu Scriptorum fuorum Historia, p. 28. has promifed a new edition of this Apology, with confiderable additions. We may also place among the defenders of VANINI, the learned ELIAS FREDERICK HEIS-TER, in his Apologia pro Medicis, fect. xviii. p. 93.

[[]n] See BAYLE's Dictionary, at the article RUGGERI.
[o] See the German work of Arnold, entitled Kirchen en obliged to abandon his extravagant undertakings; C = N T. and thus his idle attempt came to nothing [p].

Keizer Historie, p. 1077.—There was formerly in the famous library of Uffenbach, a complete collection of all the papers relating to the trial of LESZYNSKI, and a full account of the proceedings against him.

XVII. SECT. I. Benedict

XXIV. The most accurate and coninent of the Atheists of this century, whose system represented the Supreme Author of all things as a Being bound by the eternal and immutable laws of neceffity or fate, was BENEDICT SPINOZA, a Portuguese Jew. This man, who died at the Hague in 1677, observed, in his conduct, the rules of wisdom and probity, much better than many who profess themselves Christians, nor did he ever endeavour to pervert the fentiments, or to corrupt the morals of those with whom he lived, or to inspire, in his discourse, a contempt of religion or virtue $\lceil q \rceil$. It is true indeed, that, in his writings, more especially in those that were published after his death, he maintains openly, that God and the Universe are one and the same Being, and that all things happen by the eternal and immutable law of nature, i. e. of an all-comprehending and infinite Being, that exists and acts by an invincible necessity. This doctrine leads directly to confequences equally impious and abfurd; for if the principle now mentioned be true, each individual is his own God, or, at least, a part of the [p] See Molleri Cimbria Literata, tom. i. p. 301. & Hagger ad Historiam Cherfones. Cimbr. part II. cap. vi. § viii. p. 164.—LA CROZE, Entretiens for divers fajets d'Histoire, p. 400.

[q] The Life of Spinoza has been accurately written by Colerus, whose performance was published at the Hague in 8vo, in the year 1706. But a more ample and circumitantial account of this singular man has been given by Lengler bu Fresnoy, and is prefixed to Boulanvillines' Exposition of the Doctrine of Spinoza, which was published at Amsterdam, under the title of Brusels, in 12mo, in the year 1731. See also Bayle's Distinorary, at the article Spinoza. CF Lengler bu Fresnoy inpublished the work of Colerus, and added to it several anecdates and circumstances, between the spinoza, written by an infamous profligate, whose name was Lucas, and who practifed physic at the Hague. See below the notes [x] and [y].

univerfal

XVII. SECT. I.

CENT. univerfal Deity, and is, therefore, impeccable and perfect $\lceil r \rceil$. Be that as it may, it is evident that Spinoza was feduced into this monstrous system by the Cartesian philosophy, of which he was a passionate admirer, and which was the perpetual fubject of his meditation and fludy. Having > [r] The learned FABRICIUS, in his Bibliotheca Graca, lib. v. part III. p. 119. and JENICHEN, in his Historia Spinonifini Lebnhofiani, p. 58-72. has given us an ample lift of the writers who have refuted the fyftem of SPINOZA. The real opinion which this fubtile fophilt entertained concerning the Deity, is to be learned in his Ethicks, that were published after his death, and not in his Tracatus Theologico-Peliticus, which was printed during his life. For in this latter Treatife he reasons like one who was perfunded that there exists an eternal Deity, diffinct from matter and the universe, who has fent upon earth a religion defigned to form men to the practice of benevolence and justice, and has confirmed that religion by events of a wonderful and effonishing, though not of a supernatural kind. But in his Ethicks he throws off the mask, explains clearly his fentiments, and endeavours to demonstrate, that the Deity is nothing more than the universe, producing a feries of necessary movements or acts, in configuence of its own intrinsic, immutable, and irrefishible energy. This diversity of fentiments that appears in the different productions of Spinoza, is a fufficient refutation of those who, forming their estimate of his fyshem from his Tractatus Theologico-Politicus alone, pronounce it less pernicious, and its author less impious, than they are generally supposed to be. But, on the other hand, how shall this diversity be accounted for? Are we to suppose that Spinoza proceeded to atheifm by gradual fleps, or is it rather more probable, that, during his life, he prudently concealed his real fentiments? Which of thefe two is the cafe, it is not eafy to determine; it appears, however, from testimonies every way worthy of credit, that he never, during his whole life, either made, or attempted to make, converts to irreligion; never faid any thing in public that tended to encourage difrespectful fentiments of the Supreme Being, or of the worship that is due to him; nay, it is well known, on the contrary, that, when subjects of a religious nature were incidentally treated in the course of conversation where he was prefent, he always expressed himself with the utmost decency on the occasion, and often with an air of picty and feriousness that was more adapted to edify than to give offence. See DES MAIZEAUX, Vie de Al. de S. Evremond, p. 117. tom. i. of his works. This appears also evident from the Letters that are published in his posthumous works.

> > adopted

adopted that general principle, about which phice Ent. Rollofophers of all fects are agreed; that all realities Sect. 1. are possessed by the Deity in the most eminent degree; and having added to this principle, as equally evident, the opinion of Descartes, that there are only two realities in nature, thought and extension, the one effential to spirit, and the other to matter [s]; the natural confequence of this was, that he should attribute to the Deity both these realities, even thought and extension, in an eminent degree; or, in other words, should represent them as infinite and immense in God. Hence the transition feemed eafy enough to that enormous fystem, which confounds God with the Universe, represents them as one and the fame Being, and fuppofes only one fubstance from whence all things proceed, and into which they all return. It is natural to observe here, what even the friends of Spinoza are obliged to acknowledge, that this fystem is neither attended with that luminous perspicuity, nor that force of evidence, that are proper to make profelytes. It is too dark, too intricate, to allure men from the belief of those truths relating to the Deity, which the works of nature, and the plainest dictates of reason, are perpetually enforcing upon the human mind. Accordingly, the followers of Spinoza tell us, without hefitation, that it is rather by the fuggestions of a certain fense, than by the investigations of reason, that his doctrine is to be comprehended; and that it is of fuch a nature, as to be easily misunder-

[s] The hypothesis of DES CARTES is not, perhaps, reprefented with sufficient accuracy and precision, by faying that he looked upon thought as effential to spirit, and extension as effential to matter; fince it is well known, that this philosopher confidered thought as the very effence or fulftance of the foul, and extension as the very effence and substance of matter.

CENT. XVII. SECT. I ftood even by persons of the greatest fagacity and penetration [t]. The disciples of Spinoza assume the denomination of Pantheists, choosing rather to derive their distinctive title from the nature of their doctrine, than from the name of their mass-

[t] There is certainly no man fo little acquainted with the character of BAYLE, as to think him void of difcernment and fagacity; and yet this most fubtile metaphysician has been accufed, by the followers of SPINOZA, of milunderstanding and mifreprefenting the doctrine of that Pantheilt, and confequently of answering it with very little folidity. See BAYLE's Dictionary, at the article Spinoza. This charge is brought against BAYLE, with peculiar severity, by L. MEIER, in his Preface to the Posthumous Works of Spinoza, in which, after complaining of the mifrepresentations that have been given of the opinions of that writer, he pretends to maintain, that his fythem was, in every point, conformable to the doctrines of Christianity. BOULAINVILLIERS also, another of Spinoza's commentators and advocates, declares, in his preface to a book, whose perfictions title is mentioned below in note [y], that all the antagonists of that famous Jew either ignorantly mifunderflood, or maliciously perverted his true doctrine; his words are; Les Refutations de Spinofa m'out induit à juger, ou que leurs Auteurs n'avoient pas voulu mettre la doctrine, qu'ils combattent, dans une evidence suffifante, ou qu'ils l'avoient mal entendue, p. 153.-But now, if this be true, if the doctrine of Spinoza be not only far beyond the comprehension of the vulgar, but also difficult to be understood, and liable to be mistaken and misreprefented by men of the most acute parts and the most eminent abilities, what is the most obvious conclusion deducible from this fact? It is plainly this, that the greatest part of the Spinofifts, whose fect is supposed by some to be very numerous in Europe, have adopted the doctrine of that famous Atheist, not fo much from a conviction of its truth founded on an examination of its intricate contents, as from the pleafure they take in a fystem that promises impunity to all transgressions that do not come within the eognizance of the civil law, and thus lets loofe the reins to every irregular appetite and passion. For it would be fenfelefs, in the highest degree, to imagine, that the pretended multitude of the Spinofitts, many of whom never once dreamed of exercifing their minds in the purfuit of truth, or accultoming them to philosophical discussion, should all accurately comprehend a fystem, which, according to their own accounts, has escaped the penetration and fagacity of the greatest geniuses.

ter [u]. The most noted members of this CENT. ftrange fect were a physician, whose name was Lewis Meier [w], a certain person called Lu-

SECT. I.

CAS,

[4] TOLAND, unable to purchase himself a dinner, compoled and published, in order to supply the sharp demands of hunger, an infamous and impious book under the following title: Pantheifticon; five, Formula celebranda Societatis Socratice, in Tres Particulus divife: que Pantheistarum, five fodulium continent, 1. Mores et Asilonata; 11. Numen et Philo-Jophiam; 111. Libertatem et non fallentem legem neque fallendam, &c. The defign of this book, which was published in Svo at London in the year 1720, appears by the title. It was intended to draw a picture of the licentious morals and principles of his brethren the Pantheifls under the fictitious description of a Socratical Society, which they are represented as holding in all the places where they are difperfed. In the Socratical, or rather Bacchanalian Society, deferibed in this pernicious work, the prelident and members are faid to converle freely on feveral fubjects. There is also a Form or Liturgy read by the prefident, who officiates as prieft, and is answered by the affembly in fuitable responses. He recommends earnedly to the members of the fociety the care of truth, liberty, and bealth; exhorts them to guard against superfiction, that is religion; and reads aloud to them, by way of Leffon, certain select passages out of CICERO and SENECA which feem to fayour irreligion. His colleagues promife folemnly to conform themselves to his injunctions and exportations. Sometimes the whole fraternity is fo animated with enthuliafin and joy, that they all raife their voices together, and fing certain verles out of the ancient Latin poets, that are fuitable to the laws and principles of their fect. See DES MAITEAUX, Lift of John Toland, p. 77.—Bibliotheque Angloife, tom. viii. part II. p. 289. If the Pantheiflical community be really fuch as it is here represented, it is not so much the duty of wife and good men to dispute with or refute its members, as it is the businefs of the civil magistrate to prevent such licentious and turbulent spirits from troubling the order of society, and seducing honest citizens from their religious principles, and the duties of their respective stations.

[w] This Meter was the person who translated into Latin the pieces that SPINOZA had composed in the Dutch language; who affilted him in his last moments, after having attempted, in vain, to remove his diforder; and who published his Pefthumous Works with a Preface, in which, with great impudence and little fuccels, he endeavours to prove, that the doStrine of SPINOZA differs in nothing from that of the Golpel. MEIER

CENT. CAS[x], Count BOULAINVILLIERS [y], and some SECT. I. others, equally contemptible on account of their fentiments and morals.

XXV. The

is alfo the author of a well-known treatife, thus entitled, Philosophia Scriptura Interpress, Eleutheropoli, 1666, in 4to, in which the merit and authority of the facred writings are examined by the dictates of philosophy, that is to fay, of the philosophy.

losophy of Mr. MEIER.

[x] Lucas was a physician at the Hogue, and was as famous for what he called his Quintessences, as he was infamous on account of the profligacy of his morals. He left behind him a Life of Spinoza, from whence Lengler Du Fresnov took all the additions that he made to the Life of that Atheist written by Colerus. He also composed a work which is still handed about and bought, at an extravagant price, by those in whose judgment rarity and impiety are equivalent to merit. This work is entitled, L'Esprit de Spinoza, and surpasses infinitely, in atheistical profances, even those productions of Spinoza that are looked upon as the most permicious; so far has this miserable writer lost fight of every dictate of prudence, and triumphed even over the restraints of sname.

[y] This fertile and copious, but paradoxical and inconfiderate writer, is abundantly known by his various productions relating to the History and Political State of the French Nation, by a certain prolix Fable entitled, The Life of Mahomet, and by the adverse turns of fortune that pursued him. His character was fo made up of inconfiftencies and contradictions, that he is almost equally chargeable with superstition and atheifm: for though he acknowledged no other Deity than the universe, or nature, yet he looked upon Mahomet as authorifed, by a divine commission, to instruct mankind; and he was of opinion, that the fate of nations, and the deftiny of individuals, could be foreknown by an attentive observation of the flars. Thus the man was, at the fame time, an atheist and an aftrologer. Now this medley of a man was greatly concerned, in confequence, forfooth, of his ardent zeal for the public good, to fee the admirable doctrine of Spinoza fo generally mifunderstood, and therefore he formed the laudable defign of expounding, illustrating, and accommodating it, as is done with respect to the doctrines of the Gospel in books of piety to ordinary capacities. This defign, indeed, he executed, but not fo fortunately for his mafter as he might fondly imagine; fince it appeared most evidently, from his own account of the fystem of Spinoza, that Bayle, and the other writers who had reprefented his doctrine as repugnant to the plaineft dictates of reason, and utterly destructive of all religion, had judged

XXV. The progressive and slourishing state of CENT. the arts and sciences in the seventeenth century is abundantly known; and we fee the effects, and enjoy the fruits, of the efforts then made for the advancement of learning. No branch of litera- tivated and ture feemed to be neglected. Logic, philosophy, history, poetry, and rhetoric; in a word, all the sciences that belong to the respective provinces of reason, experience, observation, genius, memory, and imagination, were cultivated and improved improved.

The fciences cul-

judged rightly, and were neither mifled by ignorance nor temerity. In short, the book of BOULAINVILLIERS set the atheism and impiety of Spinoza in a much more clear and ftriking light than ever they had appeared before. This infamous book, which was worthy of eternal oblivion, was published by LENGLET DU FRESNOY, who, that it might be bought with avidity, and read without reluctance, prefixed to it the attracting, but perfidious, title of A Refutation of the Errors of Spinoza; adding indeed, to it fome feparate pieces, to which this title may, in fome measure, be thought applicable: the whole title runs thus: Refutation des Erreurs de Benoit de Spinoza, par M. de Fenelon, Achevêque de Cambray, par le Pere Lami Benedictin, et par M. le Comte de Boulainvilliers, avec la Vie de Spinofu, écrite par Jean Colerus, ministre de l'Église Lu-therienne de la Hoye, augmentée de beancoup de particularités tirées d'une Vie Manuscripte de ce Philosophe, sait par un de ses Amis (this friend was Lucas, the atheistical physician mentioned in the preceding note) à Bruxelles, chez François Foppeus, 1731, in 12mo. Here we see the poison and the antidote joined together, but the latter perfidiously distributed in a manner and measure every way infusficient to remove the noxious effects of the former: in a word, the wolf is shut up with the sheep. The account and defence of the philosophy of Spinoza, given by Boulainvilliers under the infidious title of a Refutation, takes up the greatest part of this book, and is placed first, and not last in order, as the title would infinuate. Besides, the whole contents of this motley collection are not enumerated in the title; for at the end of it we find a Latin Treatife, entitled, Certamen Philosophicum propugnata Veritatis divina et naturalis, adversus Jo. BREDENBURGII principia, in fine annexa. This philosophical controversy contains a Defence of the Doctrine of Spinoza, by Bredenburg; and a Refutation of that Defence by Isaac Orobio, a learned Jewish physician at Amflerdam, and was first published in 8vo in the year 1703.

CENT. XVII. SECI. I.

with remarkable fuccess throughout the Christian world. While the learned men of this happy period discovered such zeal for the improvement of science; their zeal was both inflamed and directed by one of the greatest and rarest geniuses that ever arole for the infiruction of mankind. This was FRANCIS BACON, Lord VERULAM, who, towards the commencement of this century, opened the paths that lead to true philosophy in his admirable works [z]. It must be acknowledged indeed, that the rules he prescribes, to direct the refearches of the fludious, are not all practicable, amidst the numerous prejudices and impediments to which the most zerlous enquirers are exposed in the purfuit of truth; and it appears plainly that this great man, to whose elevated and comprehensive genius all things second casy, was at certain times to far carried away by the vallness of his conceptions, as to require from the application and abilities of men more than they were capable of performing, and to defire the end, without always examining whether the means of attaining it were possible. At the same time it must be confessed, that a great part of the improvements in learning, and of the progress in science that were made in Europe, during this century, was owing to the counfels and directions of this extraordinary man. This is more especially true of the improvements that were made in natural philosophy, to which noble science

^[2] More especially in his Treatise Dz Dignitale et Augmenia Scientiarum, and in his Novum Organian. See the Life of that great man that is prefixed to the fall edition of his Worke, published by Millar, in four volumes in folio.—Bibliotheque Britannique, tom. xv. p. 128.—In Mr. Maller's Life of Bacon, there is a particular and interesting account of his noble attempt to reform the miserable philosophy that prevailed before his time. See also Voltairs, Millings de Litterature, &c. in the fourth volume of his Works, chap. xiv. p. 225.

BACON did fuch important fervice, as is alone CENT. fufficient to render his name immortal. He SECT. I. opened the eyes of those who had been led blindfold by the dubious authority of traditionary fyltems, and the uncertain directory of hypothesis and conjecture. He led them to Nature, that they might confult that oracle directly and near at hand, and receive her answers; and, by the introduction of experimental inquiry, he placed philosophy upon a new and folid basis. It was thus undoubtedly that he removed the prejudices of former times, which led men to confider all human knowledge as circumfcribed within the bounds of Greek and Latin erudition, and an acquaintance with the more elegant and liberal arts; and thus, in the vast regions of nature, he opened fcenes of instruction and science, which, although hitherto unknown or difregarded, were infinitely more noble and fublime, and much more productive of folid nourishment to the minds of the wife, than that kind of learning that was in vogue before his time.

XXVI. It is remarkable, in general, that the More effectiences of natural philosophy, mathematics, and Mathemaastronomy, were carried in this century, in all the ties. nations of Europe, to fuch a high degree of perfection, that they feemed to rife, all of a fudden, from the puny weakness of infancy to a state of full maturity. There is certainly no fort of comparison between the philosophers, mathematicians, and aftronomers of the fixteenth and feventeenth centuries. The former look like pigmies, when compared with the gigantic stature of the latter. At the head of these latter appears Galilei, the ornament of natural science in Italy, who was encouraged, in his aftronomical refearches and difcoveries, by the munificence and protection of the Grand Dukes of $Tufcany \lceil a \rceil$. After this arose

[a] See HEUMAN's Alla Philosoph. part XIV. p. 261. part XV. p. 467. part XVII. p. 803.

CENT. XVII. SECT. I.

in France Descartes and Gassendi, who left behind them a great number of eminent disciples; in Denmark Tycho Brahe; in England Boyle and NEWTON; in Germany Kepler, Hevelius, and LEIBNITZ; and in Switzerland the two BER-NOULLI. These philosophers of the first magnitude, if I may use that expression, excited such a fpirit of emulation in Europe, and were followed by fuch a multitude of admirers and rivals, that, if we except those countries that had not vet emerged from a state of ignorance and barbarism, there was fearcely any nation that could not boast of possessing a profound mathematician, a famous aftronomer, or an eminent philosopher. Nor were the dukes of Tuscany, however distinguished by their hereditary zeal for the sciences, and their liberality to the learned, the only patrons of philofophy at this time; fince it is well known that the monarchs of Great Britain and France, CHARLES II., and LEWIS XIV., honoured the fciences, and those that cultivated them, with their protection and encouragement. It is to the munificence of these two princes that the Royal Society of London, and the Academy of Sciences at Paris, owe their origin and establishment, their privileges, honours, and endowments; and that we, of consequence, are indebted for the interesting difcoveries that have been made by thefe two learned bodies, the end of whose institution is the fludy and investigation of nature, and the culture of all those arts and sciences that lead to truth, and are useful to mankind [b]. These establishments, and the enquiries they were fo naturally CENT. adapted to encourage and promote, proved not SECT. I. only beneficial, in the highest degree, to the civil interests of mankind, but were also productive of inestimable advantages to the cause of the true religion. By these enquiries, the empire of superstition, which is always the bane of genuine piety, and often a fource of rebellion and calamity in fovereign states, was greatly shaken; by them the sictitious prodigies, that had fo long held miferable mortals in a painful state of servitude and terror, were deprived of their influence; by them natural religion was built upon folid foundations, and illustrated with admirable perspicuity and evidence; as by them the infinite perfections of the Supreme Being were demonstrated with the utmost clearness and force from the frame of the universe in general, and also from the structure of its various parts.

[[]b] The History of the Royal Society of London was published by Dr. Sprat in 4to, in the year 1722*. See the Biblioth, Angloife, tom. xi. p. 1. The History of the Academy of Pillars has been composed by Fontenelle. The reader will find a comparison between these two learned bodies in the fourth volume of the Works of Voltaire, entitled, Melanges de Listerature et de Philosophie, cap. xxvi. p. 317.

K * A much more interesting and ample history of this respectable feeterly has lately been composed and published by Dr. Віксн, its learned secretary.

XXVII. The improvements made in History, History, and more especially the new degrees of light that were thrown upon the ancient History of the church, were of eminent fervice to the cause of genuine Christianity. For thus the original fources and reasons of many absurd opinions and institutions, which antiquity and custom had rendered facred, were discovered and exposed in their proper colours; and innumerable errors that had possessed and perplexed the anxious spirits of the credulous and fuperstitious multitude, were happily deprived of their authority and influence. Thus, of consequence, the cheerful light of Truth, and the calm repose and tranquillity that attend it, arose upon the minds of many, and human life was delivered from the crimes that have been fanctified by fuperstition, and from the tumults and agitations in which it has fo often involved unhappy mortals. The advantages that flowed from the improvement of historical knowledge are both

CENT. both innumerable and inestimable. By this XVII. sect. I. many pious and excellent perfons, whom ignorance or malice had branded with the ignominious title of Hereties, were delivered from reproach, recovered their good fame, and thus were focured against the malignity of superstition. this it appeared, that many of those religious controverfices, which had divided nations, friends, and families, and involved fo often fovereign flates in bloodshed, rebellion, and crimes of the most horrid kind, were owing to the most trisling and contemptible causes, to the ambiguity and obfcurity of certain theological phrases and terms, to fuperflition, ignorance, and envy, to ghoftly pride and ambition. By this it was demonstrated, with the fullest evidence, that many of those religious rites and ceremonies, which had been long confidered as of divine institution, were derived from the most inglorious sources, being either borrowed from the manners and customs of barbarous nations, or invented with a defign to deceive the ignorant and credulous, or dictated by the idle visions of senseless enthusiasm. By this the ambitious intrigues of the bishops and other ministers of religion, who, by persidious arts, had encroached upon the prerogatives of the throne, usurped a confiderable part of its authority and revenues, and held princes in fubjection to their yoke by terrors of the church, were brought to light. And, to mention no more infrances, it was by the lamp of History that those councils, whose decrees had so long been regarded as infallible and facred, and revered as the dictates of celefial wifdom, were exhibited to the attentive observer as affemblies, where an odious mixture of ignorance and knavery very frequently prefided. Our happy experience, in these latter times, furnishes daily instances of the falutary effects of these important discoveries on the state of the Christian

Christian church, and on the condition of all its CENT. members. Hence flow that lenity and moderation that are mutually exercifed by those who differ from one another in their religious fentiments; that prudence and caution that are used in estimating opinions and deciding controversies; that protection and support that are granted to men of worth, when attacked by the malice of bigotry; and that visible diminution of the errors, frauds, crimes, and cruelties, with which superstition formerly embittered the pleasures of human life, and the enjoyments of focial intercourfe.

XXVIII. Many of the doctors of this century The fludy applied themselves, with eminent success, to the fludy of Hebrew and Greek literature, and of the Oriental languages and antiquities. And, their progress in these kinds of erudition was rapid, fo, in many instances, was the use they made of them truly excellent and laudable. For, by these fuccours, they were enabled to throw light on many difficult paffages of the facred writings that had been ill understood and injudiciously applied, and which fome had even employed in supporting erroneous opinions, and giving a plaufible colour to pernicious doctrines. Hence it happened, that many patrons and promoters of popular notions, and visionary and groundless fancies, were deprived of the fallacious arguments by which they maintained their errors. It cannot also be denied, that the cause of religion received confiderable benefit from the labours of those, who either endeavoured to preferve the purity and elegance of the Latin language, or who, beholding with emulation the example of the French. employed their industry in improving and polishing the languages of their respective countries. For it must be evidently both honourable and advantageous to the Christian church to have always in its bosom men of learning, qualified to write

CENT. XVII. SECT. I. write and discourse upon theological subjects with precision, elegance, ease, and perspicuity, that so the ignorant and perverse may be allured to receive instruction, and also be able to comprehend with facility the instructions they receive.

The law of nature is fludied with attention.

XXIX. The rules of morality and practice, which were laid down in the facred writings by CHRIST and his apostles, assumed an advantageous form, received new illustrations, and were fupported upon new and folid principles, when that great system of law, that results from the constitution of nature, and the dictates of right reason, began to be studied with more diligence, and investigated with more accuracy and perspicuity than had been the case in preceding ages. In this sublime study of the law of nature, the immortal Grotius led the way in his excellent book Concerning the Rights of War and Peace; and fuch was the dignity and importance of the fubject, that his labours excited the zeal and emulation of men of the most eminent genius and abilities $\lceil \epsilon \rceil$, who turned their principal attention to this noble science. How much the labours of these great men contributed to assist the ministers of the Gospel, both in their discourses and writings concerning the duties and obligations of Christians, may be easily feen by comparing the books of a practical kind that have been published fince the period now under confideration, with those that were in vogue before that time. There is fcarcely a difcourse upon any subject of Christian morality, how inconsiderable soever it may be, that does not bear fome marks of the improvement which was introduced into the fcience of morals by those great men, who studied that science in the paths of nature, in the frame C ENT. and constitution of rational and moral beings, SECT. I. and in the relations by which they are rendered members of one great family, under the inspection and government of one common and univerfal [d] Parent.] It is unquestionably certain, that fince this period the dictates of natural law, and the duties of Christian morality, have been more accurately defined; certain evangelical precepts, whose nature and foundations were but imperfectly comprehended in the times of old, more clearly illustrated; the superiority which distinguishes the morality of the Gospel from that course of duty that is deducible from the mere light of nature, more fully demonstrated; and those common notions and general principles, which are the foundations of moral obligation, and are every way adapted to difpel all doubts that may arife, and all controversies that may be started, concerning the nature of evangelical righteousness and virtue, established with greater evidence and certainty. It may also be added, that the impiety of those infidels who have had the effrontery to maintain, that the precepts of the Gospel are contrary to the dictates of found reason, repugnant to the constitution of our nature, inconfistent with the interests of civil society, adapted to enervate the mind, and to draw men off from the business, the duties, and enjoyments of life [e], has been much more triumphantly refuted in the feventeenth and eighteenth centuries, than in any other period of the Chriftian church.

[[]c] See ADAM. FRID. GLAFEY, Historia Juris Natura; to which is subjoined his Bibliotheca Juris Natura et Gentium.

[[]d] This fentence, beginning with There is fearcely a dif-course, and ending with Universal Parent, is added by the translator.

Tel Rouss. Contr. Soc.

CENT. XVII.
SECT. I.
The flate of the Ariftotelian and Paraceliffic philosophy.

XXX. To these reflections upon the state of learning and fcience in general, it may not be improper to add a particular and feparate account of the progress and revolutions of philosophy in the Christian schools. At the beginning of this century almost all the European philosophers were divided into two classes, one of which comprehended the Peripateties, and the other the Chemists, or Fire-philosophers, as they were often stiled. These two classes contended warmly for many years which should have the pre-cminence; and a great number of laboured and fubtile productions were published during the course of this philosophical contest. The Peripatetics were in possession of the professorships in almost all the schools of learning, and looked upon all such as prefumed, either to reject, or even amend the doctrines of ARISTOTLE, as objects of indignation, little less criminal than traitors and rebels. It is however observable, that the greatest part of these supercilious and persecuting doctors, if we except those of the academies of Tubingen, Alterf, Fuliers, and Leipfic, were less attached to ARI-STOTLE himself than to his modern interpreters and commentators. The Chemists spread themfelves through almost all Europe, and assumed the obscure and ambiguous title of Rosecrucian Brethren [f], which drew at first some degree of refpect,

[[]f] The title of Rosecrucians evidently denotes the chemical philosophers, and those who blended the doctrines of religion with the secrets of chemistry. The denomination itself is drawn from the seience of chemistry; and they only who are acquainted with the peculiar language of the chemists can understand its true signification and energy. It is not compounded, as many imagine, of the two words rosa and crax, which signify rose and eras, which signify rose and eras, which signifies deve. Of all natural bodies, deve is the most powerful dissolvent of gold. The eross, in the chemical style, is equivalent to sight; because the signer of the eross X exhibits, at the same time, the three letters of which fpect, as it feemed to be borrowed from the arms of Luther, which were a crefs placed upon a rofe. They inveighed against the Peripatetics with a fingular degree of bitterness and animosity, represented them as corrupters both of religion and philosophy, and published a multitude of treatises against them, which discovered little else than their folly and their malice. At the head of these fanatics were Robert Fludd [g], a native of England, and a man of surprising genius; Jacob Behmen, a shoe-maker, who lived at Gorlitz; and Michael Mayer [b]. These leaders of the word lux, i. e. light is compounded. Now lux is called by this feet the fred or menshrum of the red dragon; or, in other words, that gross and corporeal light, which, when properly digested and modified, produces gold. From all this it follows, that a Rofecrucian philosopher is one who, by the intervention and affiltance of the dew, feeks for light, or, in other words, the fubfiance called the Philosopher's flone. All other explications of this term are falfe and chimerical. The interpretations that are given of it by the chemilts, who love, on all occasions, to involve themselves in intricacy and darknefs, are invented merely to deceive those who are firangers to their mysteries. The true energy and meaning of this denomination of Rofectucians did not escape the penetration and fagacity of GASSENDI, as appears by his Examen Philofophia Fluddana, & xv. tom. iii. opp. p. 261. It was, however, itill more fully explained by Renaudot, a famous French physician, in his Conferences Publiques, tom. 4. p. 87. There is a great number of materials and anecdotes relating to the fraternity, rules, observances, and writings of the Rosecrucians (who made fuch a noise in this century), to be found in Ar-NOLDI'S Kirchen-und Ketzer Historie, part II. p. 1114.

[g] See for an account of this fingular man, from whose writings Jacob Behmen derived all his mystical and rapturous doctrine, Wood's Athens Oxonienfes, vol. i. p. 610, and History at Antigg. Academic Oxonienfes, lib. ii. p. 308.—For an account of Helmont, father and son, see Hen. Witter, Memor. Philosoph.— Joach. Frid. Feller, in Miscellin. Leibnitian.—Several writers besides Arnoldi have given an account of Jacob Behmen *.

[h] See Molleri Cimbria Literata, tom. i. p. 376.

^{*} See for a further account of Jacob Behmen Sect. II. Part II. Chap. i. § XL. of this Hiftery.

The State of LEARNING and PHILOSOPHY. CENT. the fest were followed by John Baptist Hel-MONT, and his fon Francis, CHRISTIAN KNOR-SECT. I.

RIUS DE ROSENROTH, KUHLMAN, NOLLIUS, SPER-BER, and many others of various fame. An uniformity of opinion, and a fpirit of concord, feem fearcely possible in fuch a fociety as this. For as a great part of its doctrine is derived from certain internal feelings, and certain flights of imagination, which can neither be comprehended nor defined, and is supported by certain testimonies of the external fenses, whose reports are equally illufory and changeable; fo it is remarkable, that, among the more eminent writers of this fect, there are fcarcely any two who adopt the fame tenets and fentiments. There are, neverthelefs, fome common principles that are generally embraced, and that ferve as a centre of union to the fociety. They all maintain, that the dissolution of bodies, by the power of fire, is the only way through which men can arrive at true wifdom, and come to difcern the first principles of things. They all acknowledge a certain analogy and harmony between the powers of nature and the doctrines of religion, and believe that the Deity governs the kingdom of grace by the fame laws with which he rules the kingdom of nature; and hence it is that they employ chemical denominations to express the truths of religion. They all hold, that there is a fort of divine energy or foul distused through the frame of the universe, which fome call Archaus, others the Universal Spirit, and which others mention under different appellations. They all talk in the most obscure and fuperstitious manner of what they call the fignatures of things, of the power of the stars over all corporeal beings, and their particular influence upon the human race, of the efficacy of magic, and the various ranks and orders of demons. fine, they all agree in throwing out the most crude, crude, incomprehensible notions and ideas, in the CENT. most obscure, quaint, and unusual expressions.

SECT. I.

The philofophy of Gaffendi.

XXXI. This controverfy between the Chemists and Peripatetics was buried in filence and oblivion as foon as a new and more feemly form of philofophy was prefented to the world by two great men, who reflected a lustre upon the French nation, GASSENDI and DES CARTES. The former, whose profound knowledge of mathematics and astronomy was accompanied with the most engaging eloquence, and an acquaintance with all the various branches of folid erudition and polite literature, was canon of Digne, and profestor of mathematics at Paris. The latter, who was a man of quality and bred a foldier, furpaffed the greatest part of his cotemporaries in acuteness, fubtilty, and extent of genius, though he was much inferior to GASSENDI in point of learning. In the year 1624, Gassendi attacked Aristotle. and the whole fect of his commentators and followers, with great refolution and ingenuity [i]; but the refentment and indignation which he drew upon himfelf from all quarters by this bold attempt, and the fweetness of his natural temper, which made him an enemy to diffention and contest, engaged him to defist, and to suspend an enterprise that, by opposing the prejudices, was fo adapted to inflame the passions of the learned. Hence no more than two books of the work he had composed against the Aristotelians were made public; the other five were suppressed [j]. He also wrote against FLUDD, and, by resuting him,

^{(*) [}i] The tide of his book against the Aristotelians is as follows: Exercitationum paradoxicarum alverfus Ariftoteleos Libri VII. in quibus procipua tottus Peripatetice Doctrine fun-damenta excutiuntur, opiniones vero, aut es vetufioribus olfotete, Habilianiar.

^[] See Bougerell, Vie de Gassendi, p. 17. & 23.

CENT. refuted at the fame time the Rosecrucian Brethren; XVII. SECT. I. and here the Aristotelians seemed to behold his labours with a favourable eye. After having overturned feveral false and visionary systems of philosophy, he began to think of substituting fomething more folid and fatisfactory in their place; and in purfuance of this defign he proceeded with the utmost circumspection and caution. He recommended to others, and followed himfelf, that wife method of philosophical investigation, which, with a flow and timorous pace, rifes from the objects of fense to the discussions of reason. and arrives at truth by affiduity, experiment, and an attentive observation of the laws of nature; or, to express the same thing in other words, GASSENDI struck out that judicious method, which, by an attention to facts, to the changes and motions of the natural world, leads by degrees to general principles, and lays a folid foundation for rational enquiry. In the application of this method, he had recourse chiefly to mathematical fuccours, from a perfuafion that demonstration and certainty were the peculiar fruits of that accurate and luminous science. He drew no assistance from the science of metaphysics, which he overlooked from an opinion that the greatest part of its rules and decifions were too precarious to fatisfy a fincere inquirer, animated with the love of truth $\lceil k \rceil$.

The Cartefian philofophy.

XXXII. DES CARTES followed a very different method in his philosophical refearches. He abandoned the mathematics, which he had at first looked

[[]k] See Gassendi's Inflitationes Philosophia; a diffuse production, which takes up the two first volumes of his works, and in which his principal defign is to shew, that those opinions, of both the ancient and modern philosophers, which are deduced from metaphyfical principles, have little folidity, and are generally defective in point of evidence and perfpicuity.

looked upon as the tree of knowledge, and em- C E N T. ployed the fcience of abstract ideas, or metaphy- SECT. I. fics, in the investigation of truth. Having accordingly laid down a few plain general principles, which feemed to be deduced immediately from the nature of man, his first business was to form distinct notions of Deity, matter, foul, body, fpace, the universe, and the various parts of which it is composed. From these notions, examined with attention, compared and combined together according to their mutual relations, connections, and refemblances, and reduced into a kind of fystem, he proceeded still further, and made admirable use of them in reforming the other branches of philosophy, and giving them a new degree of stability and consistence. This he effected by connecting all his branches of philofophical reasonings in such a manner, that principles and confequences followed each other in the most accurate order, and that the latter seemed to flow from the former in the most natural manner. This method of purfuing truth could not fail to attract the admiration of many: and fo indeed it happened; for no fooner had Des Cartes published his difcoveries in philosophy, than a confiderable number of eminent men, in different parts of Europe, who had long entertained a high difgust against the inelegant and ambiguous jargon of the schools, adopted these discoveries with zeal, declared their approbation of the new fystem, and expressed their defire that its author should be substituted in the place of the Peripatetics, as a philosophical guide to the youth in the public feminaries of learning. On the other hand, the Peripatetics, or Aristotelians, feconded by the influence of the clergy, who apprehended that the cause of religion was aimed at and endangered by these philosophical innovations, made a prodigious noife, and left no means unemployed to prevent the downfal of their old fystem, and to diminish the growing re-G 2 putation

C E N T. putation of the new philosophy. To execute this XVII. I invidious purpose with the more facility, they not only accused Des Cartes of the most dangerous and pernicious errors, but went fo far, in the extravagance of their malignity, as to bring a charge of Atheism against him. This furious zeal of the Aristotelians will not appear so extraordinary, when it is confidered, that they contended not fo much for their philosophical fystem as for the honours, advantages, and profits they derived from it. The Theosophists, Rosecrucians, and Chemists, entered into this contest against Des Cartes, but conducted themselves with more moderation than the Aristotelians, notwithstanding their perfuation that the Peripatetic philofophy, though chimerical and impious, was much less intolerable than the Cartesian system [/]. The confequences of this dispute were favourable to the progress of science; for the wifer part of the European philosophers, although they did not at all adopt the fentiments of DES CARTES, were nevertheless encouraged and animated by his example to carry on their enquiries with more freedom from the reftraints of tradition and perfonal authority, than they had formerly done, and to throw refolutely from their necks that yoke of fervitude, under which ARISTOTLE and his followers had fo long kept them in fubjection.

Gaffendi the clari

XXXIII. The most eminent contemporaries of DES CARTES applauded, in general, the efforts he made towards the reformation of philosophy, and that noble resolution with which he broke the thackles of magisterial authority, and struck out new paths, in which he proceeded without a guide, in the fearch after truth. They also approved of his method of arifing, with caution and accuracy, from the most simple, and, as it were, C ENT. the primary dictates of reason and nature, to SECT. I. truths and propositions of a more complex and intricate kind, and of admitting nothing as truth, that was not clearly and distinctly apprehended as fuch. They went still further, and unanimously acknowledged, that he had made most valuable and important discoveries in philosophy, and had demonstrated feveral truths which, before his time, were received upon no other evidence than that of tradition and conjecture. But these acknowledgments did not hinder some of those who made them with the greatest fincerity, from finding feveral effential defects in the philosophy of this great man. They looked upon his account of the causes and principles of natural things to be for the most part hypothetical, founded on fancy rather than experience. Nay, they attacked the fundamental principles upon which the whole fystem of his philosophy was built, fuch as his ideas of the Deity, of the universe, of matter and spirit, of the laws of motion, and other points that were connected with thefe. Some of these principles they pronounced uncertain; others of a pernicious tendency, and adapted to engender the most dangerous errors; others again they confidered as directly contrary to the language of experience. At the head of these objectors was his own fellow-citizen GASSENDI, who had made war before him upon the Aristotelians and Chemists; who, in genius, was his equal; in learning, by much his superior; and whose mathematical knowledge was most uncommon and extensive. This formidable adverfary directed his first attacks against the metaphyfical principles, which supported the whole structure of the Cartesian philosophy. He then proceeded still further; and, in the place of the phyfical fystem of DES CARTES, substituted one that G 3 refembled

^[4] the Bothler, Illedo Des Cartes .- As alfo the General Division, at the article Dis Cartes.

CENT. refembled not a little the natural philosophy of SECT. I. EPICURUS, though far superior to it in folidity, much more rational, confiftent, and perfect, being founded not on the illusory visions of fancy, but on the testimony of sense and the dictates of experience $\lceil m \rceil$. This new and fagacious observer of nature had not many followers, and his disciples were much less numerous than those of Des Car-TES. But what he wanted in number, was fufficiently compensated by the merit and reputation of those who adopted his philosophical fyshem; for he was followed by fome of the most eminent men in Europe, by persons distinguished in the highest degree, by their indefatigable application and their extensive knowledge both of natural philosophy and mathematics. It is also observable that he had but few disciples in his own country; but among the English, who in his time were remarkable for their application to studies of a phyfical and mathematical kind, a confiderable number adopted his philosophical fystem. Nay, it is remarkable, that even those eminent philosophers and divines, such as Whichcor, GALE, CUDWORTH, and MORE, who entered the lifts with Hobbes (whose doctrine came nearer to the principles of Gassendi than to the fystem of DES CARTES), and revived ancient Platonism in order to crush under its weight the philosopher C E N T. of Malmefbury, placed Gassendi and Plato in Sect. I. the fame class, and explained the fentiments of the latter in fuch a manner as to make them appear quite agreeable to the principles of the former $\lceil n \rceil$.

[[]m] See his Difquifitio Metaphyfica, feu Dubitationes et Inflantia adverfus Cartefii Metephylicam, et Refponda, which are published in the third volume of his works, p. 283 .- Beaxier, a celebrated French physician, has given an accurate view of the philosophy of Gassenbr in his abridgment of it, published in French at Lyons, in the year 1684, in cight volumes in 12mo. This abridgment will give the reader a clearer account of this philosophy than even the works of Gassexus himself, in which his meaning is often expressed in an au-biguous manner, and wlich are, befides, loaded with fuperfluous crudition. Life of Gassendy, accurately written by Bouderelli, a prish of the oratory, was published at Puris in 1737. See Biblioth. Françoife, tom. xxvii. p. 353.

taphyfical.

XXXIV. From this period must be dated that Two leadfamous fchifm that divided the philosophical world phical feets, into two great feets, which, though almost agreed mathematiconcerning those points that are of the greatest cal and Meutility and importance in human life, differ widely about the principles of human knowledge, and the fundamental points from whence the philosopher must proceed in his fearch of truth. Of these sects the one may properly be called Mctaphyfical, and the other Mathematical. The Metaphysical sect follows the system of Des Cartes; the Mathematical one directs its refearches by the principles of Gassendi. The former looks upon truth as attainable by abstract reasoning; the latter feeks after it by observation and experience. The follower of DES CARTES attributes little to the external fenses, and much to meditation and discussion. The disciple of Gassendi, on the contrary, places little confidence in metaphyfical discussion, and has principally recourse to the reports of fense and the contemplation of nature. The former, from a finall number of abstract truths, deduces a long feries of propositions, in order to arrive at a precise and accurate knowledge of God and nature, of body and spirit; the latter admits these metaphysical truths, but at the same time denies the possibility of erecting, upon their basis, a regular and solid system of philosophy, [[]n] See the Preface to the Latin translation of Cudworth's Intellectual System; as also the Remarks that are added to that translation. The Mosheim is the author of that Translation and of these Remarks.

CENT. without the aid of affiduous observation and resect. I. peated experiments, which are the most natural and effectual means of philosophical progress and improvement. The one, eagle-like, foars, with an intrepid flight, to the first fountain of truth, and to the general relations and final causes of things; and descending from thence explains, by them, the various changes and appearances of nature, the attributes and counfels of the Deity, the moral constitution and duties of man, the frame and structure of the universe. The other, more difficult and cautious, observes with attention, and examines with affiduity, the objects that are before his eyes; and arifes gradually from them to the first cause and the primordial principles of things. The Cartefians suppose, that many things are known by man with the utmost certainty; and hence their propenfity to form their opinions and doctrines into a regular fystem. The followers of Gassendi confider man as in a flate of ignorance with respect to an immense number of things, and, consequently, think it incumbent upon them to fuspend their judgment in a multitude of cases, until time and experience dispel their darkness; and hence it is also, that they confider a fystem as an attempt of too adventurous a nature, and by no means proportioned to the narrow extent of human knowledge; or, at least, they think, that the business of system-making ought to be left to the philosophers of future times, who, by joining together the observations and experience of many ages, shall have acquired a more fatisfactory and accurate knowledge of nature than has been yet attained.

These differitions and contests concerning the first principles of human knowledge, produced various debates upon other subjects of the utmost moment and importance; such as, the nature of God, the essence of matter, the elements or constituent principles of bodies, the laws of motion, the CENT. manner in which the Divine Providence exerts it- SECT, I. felf in the government of the world, the frame and fructure of the universe, the nature, union, and joint operations of foul and body. If we confider attentively the profound and intricate nature of these subjects, together with the limits, debility, and imperfections of the human understanding, we shall see too much reason to fear, that these contests will last as long as the present state of man [0]. The wife and the good, fensible of this, will carry on fuch debates with a spirit of mildness and mutual forbearance; and knowing that differences in opinions are inevitable where truth is fo difficult of access, will guard against that temerity with which too many disputants accuse their antagonists of irreligion and impiety $\lceil p \rceil$.

XXXV. All

[0] VOLTAIRE published, in the year 1740, at Amsterdam, a pamphlet, entitled, La Metaphy fique de Newton, ou Parallele des Sentimens de Newton et de Leibnitz, which, though superficial and inaccurate, may, nevertheless, be useful to those readers who have not application enough to draw from better sources, and are, nevertheless, desirous to know how much thefe two philosophical fects differ in their principles and tenets.

[p] It is abundantly known, that Des CARTES and his metaphyfical followers were accused by many of flriking at the foundations of all religion; nor is this accufation entirely withdrawn even in our times. See in the miscellaneous works of Father HARDOUIN his Atheifts unmafked. Among these pretended Atheists, DES CARTES, with his two famous disciples Anthony LE GRAND and SILVAN REGIS hold the first rank; nor is Father MALEBRANCHE, though he feems rather chargeable with fanaticifm than atheifm, exempted from a place in this odious lift. It is true HARDOUIN, who gives fo liberally a place in the atheistical class to these great men, was himfelf a vifionary dreamer, whose judgment, in many cases, is little to be respected; but it is also true, that, in the work now under confideration, he does not reason from his own whimfical notions, but draws all his arguments from those of the followers of ARISTOTLE and GASSENDI, who have CENT. XVII. SECT. I.

The Metaphyfical or Cartesian thicksphy improved and propagated with fuccess.

XXXV. All those who had either adopted, without exception, the principles of Des Cartes, or who, without going fo far, had approved of the method and rules laid down by him for the investigation of truth, employed all their zeal and industry in correcting, amending, confirming, and illustrating, the Metaphysical species of philosophy; and the number of its votaries was prodigious, particularly in France and in the United Provinces. But among the members of this philosophical feet there were some who aimed at the destruction of all religion, more especially Spinoza, and others, who, like Balthasar Becker $\lceil q \rceil$, made use of the principles of Des CARTES, to overturn fome doctrines of Christianity, and to pervert others. This circumstance proved disadvantageous to the whole sect, and brought it into difrepute in many places. The Metaphyfical philosophy fell, however, afterwards have opposed, with the greatest success and acuteness, the Cartofian Tyitem. Even VOLTAIRT, notwithflanding the moderation with which he expresses himself, seems plainly enough to give his affect to the accorders of DES CARTES. On the other hand, it mult be observed, that these accusers are confured in their turn by feveral modern metaphylicians. Gassendi, for example, is charged by ARKAULD with overturning the doctrine of the foul's immortally in his controverly with Drs CARTIE, and by LEIBNITZ with corrupting and delleoying the whole fellem of natural religion. See Drs MAIZEAUX. Recueil de diverfes pières par la Philefophie, tom. ii. p. 166 *. LITENITE has also ventured to affirm, that Siv ISAAC NEWTON and his followers rob the Deity of fome of his most excellent attributes, and hap the foundations of natural religion. In floot, the controverfiel writings on both fides are filled with rash and indecent repreaches of this kind.

CF [9] See for a further account of the particular tenets and opinions of Elekbra, Sect. H. Part H. Chap. H. § XXXV.

of this century.

* If Dr. Miserim refer to the fecond edition of Des Maizeaux Re well, the page is intecerned; quired; for it is at page 155 of the volume above mentioned; that Castanan is combined by Leibnarz. It may be further observed, that the combine is not conveyed in such frong terms as those employed by our listerian. Leibnarz thys, that Gassenbi appeared to heatare and waves too much concerning the nature of the foul, and the principles of instantal religious.

into

into better hands, and was treated with great CENT. wifdom and acuteness by MALEBRANCHE, a man Sict. I. of uncommon eloquence and fubility; and by LEIBNITZ, whose name is configned to immortality as one of the greatest geniules that have appeared in the world [r]. Neither of these great men, indeed, adopted all the principles and doctrines of Des Cartes; but they both approved, upon the whole, of his philosophical method, which they enlarged, amended, and improved, by feveral additions and corrections, that rendered its procedure more luminous and fure. This is more especially true of LEIENITZ, who, rejecting the fuggettions of fancy, feemed to follow no other guides than reason and judgment; for Ma-LEBRANCHE having received from nature a warm and exuberant imagination, was too much ruled by its dictates, and was thus often imperceptibly led into the visionary regions of enthusair.

XXXVI. The Mathematical philosophy, already The promentioned, was much lefs frudied and adopted hather than the Metaphyfical fystem, and its followers that set, in France were very few in number. But it met with a favourable reception in Britain, whose philofophers perceiving, in its infant and unfinished features, the immortal lines of VERULAM's wifdom, fnatched it from its cradle, in a foil where it was ready to perish, cherished it with parental [r] For an ample and interesting account of MALF-BRANCHE and his philosophy, see Fontenelle's Eloge des Académiciens de l'Académie Royale des Sciences, tom. i. p. 317. and for a view of the errors and defects of his metaphylical Tyllem, fee HARDOUIN'S Atheists unmasked, in his Ocurres Melées, p. 43 .- Fontenelle has also given an account of the life and philefophical fentiments of LEIBNITZ in the work already quoted, vol. ii. p. 9.; but a much more ample one has been published in German by CHARLES GUNTHER LEWIS, in his history of the Leibnitian Philosophy. However, the genius and philosophy of this great man are belt to be learned from his letters to Kortholt, published at Leighe in three volumes.

SECT. I.

C E N T. tenderness, and have still continued their zealous efforts to bring it to maturity and perfection. The Royal Society of London, which may be confidered as the philosophical feminary of the nation, took it under their protection, and have neither spared expence nor pains to cultivate and improve it, and to render it subservient to the purposes of life. It owed, more especially, a great part of its progress and improvement to the countenance, industry, and genius of that immortal protector of science, the pious and venerable Mr. Boyle, whose memory will be ever precious to the worthy and the wife, the friends of religion, learning, and mankind. The illustrious names of Barrow, Wallis, and Locke, may also be added to the lift of those who contributed to the progress of natural knowledge. Nor were the learned divines of the English nation (tho' that Order has often excited the complaints of philosophers, and been supposed to behold, with a jealous and fuspicious eye, the efforts of philofophy as dangerous to the cause of religion) less zealous than the other patrons of science in this noble cause. On the contrary, they looked upon the improvement of natural knowledge not only as innocent, but as of the highest utility and importance; as admirably adapted to excite and maintain in the minds of men a profound vencration for the Supreme Creator and Governor of the world, and to furnish new supports to the cause of religion; and also as agreeable both to the laws and spirit of the Gospel, and to the fentiments of the primitive church. And hence it was, that those doctors, who, in the lectures founded by Mr. Boyle, attacked the enemies of religion, employed in this noble and pious attempt the fuccours of philosophy with the most happy and triumphant fucceis. But the immortal man, to whose immense genius and indefatigable industry 6 dustry philosophy owed its greatest improvements, c f n t, and who carried the lamp of knowledge into paths of nature that had been unexplored before his time, was Sir Isaac Newton [s], whose name was revered, and his genius admired, even by his warmest adversaries. This great man spent, with uninterrupted assistance, and charging, the new philosophy, and in throwing upon it the light of demonstration and evidence, both by observing the laws of nature, and by subjecting them to the rules of calculation; and thus he introduced a great change into natural science, and brought it to a very high degree of persection [t].

[5] Mr. Hume's account of this great man is extremely just, and contains some peculiar strokes that do honour to this elegant painter of minds. "In Newton, figu he, this island " may boaft of having produced the greatest and rarest genius " that ever arofe for the ornament and instruction of the spe-" cies. Cautious in admitting no principles, but fuch as were " founded in experiment; but refolute to adopt every fuch " principle, however new and unufual: From modelty ignorant " of his superiority above the rest of mankind, and thence less " careful to accommodate his reasonings to common apprehen-" from: More anxious to merit than acquire fame: He was, " from these causes, long unknown to the world; but his re-" putation, at last, broke out with a lustre, which scarce any " writer, during his own lifetime, had ever before attained. "While Newton feemed to draw off the veil from fome of " the mysteries of nature, he shewed, at the same time, the " imperfections of the mechanical philosophy; and thereby " reftored her ultimate fecrets to that obfeurity, in which they " ever did and ever will remain."

[1] The Mathematical Principles of Natural Philosophy, as also the other writings, whether philosophical, mathematical, or theological, of this great man, are abundantly known. There is an elegant account of his life and literary and philosophical merit given by Fontenelle, in his Eloge des Académiciens de l'Académie Royale des Sciences, tom. ii. p. 293—323.—See also the Biblioth. Lingloife, tom. xx. par. II. p. 545. and Biblioth. Raisonée, tom. vi. par. II. p. 478. See m. re especially the late learned and ingenious Mr. MACLAURIN'S Lecentus of Sir Islance Newton's Dipoweries, &c.

The

Sεςτ. I.

CENT. The English look upon it as an unquestionable proof of the folidity and excellence of the Newtonian philosophy, that its most eminent votaries were friends to religion, and have transmitted to posterity shining examples of piety and virtue; while, on the contrary, the Cartefian or Metaphyfical fystem has exhibited, in its followers, many flagrant inflances of irreligion, and fome of the most horrid impiety.

Of the philosophers who adopt neither of thefe fyftems.

XXXVII. The two famous philosophical fects now mentioned, deprived, indeed, all the ancient fystems of natural science both of their credit and their disciples; and hence it might have been expected that they would have totally engroffed and divided between them the fuffrages of the learned. But this was not the case; the liberty of thinking being restored by Des Cartes and NEWTON, who broke the fetters of prejudice, in which philosophical fuperstition had confined, in former times, the human understanding, a variety Some trufting in their supeof fects forung up. rior genius and fagacity, and others, more remarkable for the exuberance of their fancy than for the folidity of their judgment, pretended to ftrike out new paths in the unknown regions of nature, and new methods of investigating truth; but the number of their disciples was small, and the duration of their inventions transitory, and therefore it is fufficient to have barely mentioned them. There was another fort of men, whom mediocrity of genius, or an indolent turn of mind, indipoled for investigating truth by the exertion of their own talents and powers, and who, terrified at the view of fuch an arduous task, contented themselves with borrowing from the different fects fuch of their respective tenets as appeared most remarkable for their perspicuity and folidity, more especially those concerning which all the different different fects were agreed. These they compiled CENT. and digested into a system, and pushed their inquiries no further. The philosophers of this class are generally termed Eclectics. From these remarkable differences of fentiment and fystem that reigned among the jarring feets, fome perfons, otherwife diffinguished by their acuteness and fagacity, took occasion to represent truth as unattainable by fuch a fhort-fighted being as man, and to revive the desperate and uncomfortable doctrine (fhall I call it, or jargon) of the Sceptics, that had long been buried in that filence and oblivion it so justly deserved. The most eminent of these cloudy philosophers were Sanches, a physician of Toulouse [u], DE LA MOTHE LE VAYER [w], HUET, bishop of Avranches [w], to whom we may add, without temerity, the famous $\lceil u \rceil$ There is still extant a famous book of this writer, entitled, De eo quod nibil feitur, which, with the rest of his works and an account of his life, was published in 4to at Touloufe, in the year 1636.—See BAYLE's Didionary, at the article SAN-CHEZ; as also VILLEMANDI Scepticifmus debellatus, cap. iv.

SECT. I.

p. 32. [w] See Bayle's Didionary, at the article Vayer.

[x] Huer's book Concerning the Weal nefs of Human Reafin was published after his death, in French, at Amsterdam, in the year 1723, and lately in Latin. It appears, however, that this eminent writer had, long before the composition of this book, recommended the feeptical method of conducting philofophical refearches, and looked upon this method as the best adapted to establish the truth of Christianity upon folid foundstions. See the Commentarius de Rebus ad eum pertinentibus, lib. iv. p. 230. and Demonstrat. Evangeliea Prafat. § iv. p. 9. where he commends their manner of proceeding, who, by feeptical arguments, invalidate all philos phical principles, refuse they begin to prove the truth of Christianley to those who doubt of its evidence. It is well known that the Jefuits, who were particularly favoured by Hunn, have, on many occations, employed this method to throw doff into the eves of the Protestants, and thus lead them blindfold into the Romish conmunion; and that they Aill continue to practife the fame infidious instrument of federation.

The State of Learning and Philosophy.

96

C F N T. BAYLE [y], who, by the erudition and wit that SECT. I. abound in his voluminous works, has acquired fuch a distinguished reputation in the Republic of Letters.

[y] Every thing relating to the life and fentiments of BAYLE is abundantly and univerfally known. His life, composed by DES MAIZEAUX, was published in the year 1732, at the Hagne, in two volumes 8vo.—The scepticism of this infidious and seducing writer was unmasked and restued, with great learning and force of argument, by the late Mr. CROUSAZ, in a voluminous French work, entitled, Trailé du Pyrrhonisne, of which Mr. Formey has given an elegant and judicious abridgment, under the title of Triomphe de l'Evidence.

SECTION

SECTION II.

PART I.

The HISTORY of the more ANCIENT CHURCHES.

CHAP. I.

Containing the History of the Romish Church.

I. TIPPOLITO ALDOBRANDINI, under the papal CENT.

NVII.

name of CLEMENT VIII., continued to SECT. II. rule the church of Rome at the commencement of PART 1. this century, having been elected to that high The nones dignity towards the conclusion of the preceding of this conone. The eminent abilities and infidious dexterity of this pontif, as also his ardent defire of extinguishing the Protestant religion, and extending the limits of the Romish church, are universally acknowledged; but it is much questioned, whether his prudence was equal to the arduous nature of his station as pontif, and the critical circumflances of an incidental kind that arose during his administration [a]. He was succeeded in the year 1605 by Leo XI., of the house of Medicis, who died a few weeks after his election; and thus left the papal chair open to CAMILLO BORGHESE, who filled it under the denomination of PAUL V. This pontif was of a haughty and violent foirit,

VOL. V.

H

jealous

[[]a] This pontif had an edition of the Vulgate published, which was very different from that of Pope Sixtus; and this is one of the many inflances of the contractly of opinions that has prevailed among the infullible heads of the church of Rome.

CENT. jealous to excess of his authority, and infatiably XVII. furious in the execution of his vengeance upon Part I. fuch as encroached on his pretended prerogative, as appears in a striking manner, by his rash and unsuccessful contest with the Venetians [b].—

GREGORY XV. [c], who was raised to the pontificate in the year 1621, seemed to be of a milder disposition, though he was not less defective than his predecessor in equity and elemency towards those that had separated themselves from the church of Rome. An unjust severity against the friends of the Reformation is, indeed, the general and inevitable character of the Roman pontifs; for,

[b] This contest arose partly from two edicts of the Republic of Venice for preventing the unnecessary increase of religious buildings, and the augmentation of the enormous wealth of the clergy; and partly from the profecution of two eccleliafties for capital crimes, who had not been delivered up to the Pope at his requifition. It is not furprifing that thefe proceedings of the Venetians, however just and equitable, thould enflame the ambitious fury of a pontif who called himfelf Vice-God, the Monarch of Christendom, and the Supporter of Papal Omnipotence. Accordingly PAUL laid all the dominions of the Republic under an interdict; while the Venetians, on the other hand, declared that unjult and tyrannical mandate null and void; and banished from their territory the Jesuits and Capuchins, who had openly difobeyed the laws of the flate. Preparations for war were making on both fides, when an accommodation, not very honourable to the Pope, was brought about by the mediation of HENRY IV. of France. This controverfy between the Pope and the Venetians produced feveral important pieces, composed by SARPI on the fide of the Republic, and by BARONIUS and BELLARMINE in behalf of the pontif. The controverfy concerning the nature and limits of the Pope's pretended supremacy is judiciously stated, and the papal pretentions accurately examined, by SARPI, in his history of this tyrannical interdict, which, in Italian, occupies the fourth volume of his works, and was translated into Latin by WILLIAM BEDELL, of Cambridge. - It was PAUL V. that difhonoured his title of Holine's, and cast an eternal stain upon his infallibility, by an express approbation of the doctrine of SUAREZ, the Jefuit, in defence of the murder of kings. [c] His family-name was ALEXANDER LUDIVISIO.

without

without this, they would be destitute of the pre- c ENT. dominant and distinctive mark of the papacy. A SECT.II. pope, with fentiments of toleration and charity PART I. towards those who refuse a blind submission to his opinions and decisions, is a contradiction in terms. URBAN VIII., whose family name was MAFFEI BARBERINI, and who, by his interest in the conclave, ascended the papal throne in the year 1623, was a man of letters, an eloquent writer, an elegant poet, and a generous and munificent patron of learning and genius $\lceil d \rceil$; but nothing can equal the rigour and barbarity with which he treated all that bore the name of Protestants. He may be indeed considered as a good and equitable ruler of the church, when compared with INNOCENT X., of the family of PAMFILI, who fucceeded him in the year 1644.-This unworthy pontif, to a profound ignorance of all those things which it was necessary for a Christian bishop to know, joined the most shameful indolence and the most notorious profligacy, For he abandoned his person, his dignity, the administration of his temporal affairs, and the government of the church, to the disposal of Donna OLYMPIA [e], a woman of corrupt morals, infatiable avarice, and boundless ambition $\lceil f \rceil$. His zealous endeavours to prevent the peace of Westphalia, however odious they may appear, when confidered in themselves, ought not to be reckoned among his perfonal crimes, fince it is to be supposed, that any other pontif, in his place, would have made the same attempts without hefitation or remorfe. He was fucceeded in the papal chair, in the year 1655, by Fabio Chici, who assumed the title of ALEXANDER VII., and who, though less odious than his predeceffor, was nevertheless possessed of all the pernicious qualilies that are necessary to constitute a true pope, and without which the papal jurifdiction and ma-jefty cannot be maintained. The other parts of his character are drawn, much to his difadvantage, by feveral ingenious and eminent writers of the Romish church, who represent him as a man of a mean genius, unequal to great or difficult un-dertakings, full of craft and diffimulation, and chargeable with the most shameful levity and the greatest inconfistency of sentiment and conduct [g].

[d] See Leoni Allatin Apas Urdana, of which Fabricius published a second edition at Hamburg. This little work is a fort of Index, or lift, of all the learned and eminent men that adorned Rome under the pontificate of Urban VIII., and experienced the munificence and liberality of that pontif; and their number is far from being small. The Latin poems of Urban, which are not without a considerable portion of wit and elegance, have passed through several editions. These poems were composed while he was yet a cardinal. After his elevation to the pontificate, he published a remarkable edition of the Romish Breviary, and several Bulls; among which, that which abolishes the Order of Female Jefuits, and certain selfivals, those relating to image-worship and to the condemnation of Jansenius's Angustimus, and that which confers the title of Eminence upon the cardinal-legates, the three ecclessistical electors, and the grand master of Maila, are the most worthy of notice.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

[[e] This Donna OLYMPIA MALDACHINI was his brother's widow, with whom he had lived, in an illicit commerce, before his elevation to the pontificate, in which his Holinejs. continued afterwards.

[f] See the Memoires du Cardinal de Rhetz, tom. iii. p. 102. tom. iv. p. 12. of the last edition published at Geneva .- For an account of the disputes between this pontif and the French, fee BOUGEANT, Histoire de la pain de Westphalie, tous.

iv. p. 56.

[g] See Memoires du Cardinal de Rhetz, tem. îv. p. 16. 77. -Memoires de M. Joly, tom. ii. p. 186. 210. 237 .- ARCKEN-MOLVI, Memoires de la Reine Christine, tom. ii. p. 125. The craft and dissimulation attributed to this pontif really constituted an effential part of his character; but it is not firially true that he was a man of a mean genius, or unequal to great and deficult undertakings. He was a man of learning, and difcovered very eminent abilities at the treaty of Murgier, where

The two CLEMENTS IX. and X., who were elect- CENT. ed fuccessively to the papacy in the years 1668 SECT. II. and 1669, were concerned in few transactions PART I. that deferve to be transmitted to posterity $\lceil b \rceil$. This was not the case of BENEDICT ODESCHALCHI, who is known in the lift of pontifs by the denomination of INNOCENT XI., and was raifed to that high dignity in the year 1677 [i]. This respectable pontif acquired a very high and permanent reputation by the aufterity of his morals, his uncommon courage and refolution, his diflike of the groffer fuperstitions that reigned in the Romish church, his attempts to reform the manners of the clergy, and to abolish a confiderable number of those sictions and frauds that dishonour their ministry, and also by other solid and eminent virtues. But it appeared manifelly by his example, that those pontifs, who respect truth, and act from virtuous and Christian principles, may, indeed, form noble plans, but will never be able to bring them into execution, or at

he was fent in the character of Nuncio. Some writers relate, that while he was in Germany, he had formed the defign of abjuring Pepery, and embracing the Protestant Religion; but was deterred from the execution of this purpose by the example of his coufin, Count Pompay, who was poisoned at Lyons, on his way to Germany, after he had abjure I the Romifu faith. These writers add, that Chigi was confirmed in his religion by his elevation to the cardinalihio. See BAYLE, Nouvelles de la Repub. des Leitres, Octob. 1688.

[b] CLEMENT IX. was of the family of Rolligliofi, and the family-name of CLEMENT X. was Attiri, fee Memoires de la Reine Christine, tom. ii. p. 126. 131. There are upon record feveral transactions of CLEMENT IX. that do him honour, and prove his diffike of nepotifin, and his love of peace and justice.

[i] Some maintain, and with the strongest appearance of truth, that this pontif had formerly been a foldier, though this report is treated as groundless by Count Turrezonico, in his differtation De supposition militarities Stipendiis Rened. Odeschalehi. See an interesting account of this pontif in BAYLE's Dictionary, at the article Innocent KI.

least

PART L.

CENT. least to give them that measure of stability and per-SECT. II. fection, which is the object of their wishes. By his example and administration it appeared, that the wifest institutions, and the most judicious establishments, will be unable to stand firm, for any confiderable time, against the insidious stratagems or declared opposition of a deluded multitude, who are corrupted by the prevalence of licentious morals, whose imaginations are impregnated with fuperflitious fictions and fables, whose credulity is abused by pious frauds, and whose minds are nourished, or rather amused, with vain rites and fenfeles ceremonies [k]. Be that as it may, all the wife and falutary regulations of INNOCENT XI. were fuffered to go almost to ruin by the criminal indolence of PETER OTTOBONI, who was raifed to the head of the Romish church in the year 1689, and assumed the name of ALEXANDER VIII. A laudable attempt was made to revive them by Innocent XII., a man of uncommon merit and eminent talents, whose name was Pig-NATELLI, and who, in the year 1691, fucceeded ALEXANDER in the papal chair; nor were his zealous endeavours absolutely destitute of succels. But it was also his fate to learn, by experience, that the most prudent and resolute pontifs are unequal to fuch an arduous talk, fuch an Herculean labour, as the reformation of the church and court of Rome; nor were the fruits of this good pope's wife administration enjoyed long

[[]k] See Journal Universal, tom, i. p. 441. tom. vi. p. 306. The present Pope Benedict XIV.* attempted, in the year 1743, the canonization of INNOCENT XI.; but the King of France, initigated by the Jesuits, has always opposed this defign, and that more effectally on account of the mifunder-flandings that always fublified between Lewis MIV. and IN-ROSENT, of which more hereafter.

^{*} This note was written during the life of BENEDICT XIV.

after his decease [1]. The pontif, whose reign CENT. concluded this century, was JOHN FRANCIS SECT. II. ALBANI, who was raifed to the head of the PART I. Romish church in the year 1699, and assumed the name of CLEMENT XI. He furpaffed in learning the whole college of cardinals, and was inferior to none of the preceding pontifs in fagacity, lenity, and a defire, at least, to govern well; but he was very far from oppofing, with a proper degree of vigour and refolution, the inveterate corruptions and fuperstitious observances of the church over which he prefided; on the contrary, he inconfiderately aimed at, what he thought, the honour and advantage of the church (that is, the glory and interest of its pontif) by measures that proved detrimental to both, and thus shewed, in a striking example, that popes, even of the best fort, may fall imperceptibly into the greatest mistakes, and commit the most pernicious blunders, through an imprudent zeal for extending their jurisdiction, and augmenting the influence and lustre of their station $\lceil m \rceil$.

[/] For an account of the character, morals, and election, of Innocent XII., see the Letters of Cardinal Norts, published in the fifth volume of his Works, p. 362. 365.

[m] In the year 1752, there appeared at Padua, a Life of CLEMENT XI., composed in French, by the learned and eloquent Mr. LAFITAU, Bishop of Sifteron, in two volumes 8vo. The fame year Mr. REBOULET, Chancellor of Avignon, published in two volumes in 4to, his Histoire de Clement XI. These two productions, and more especially the latter, are written with uncommon elegance; but they both abound with historical errors, which the French writers, in general, are at too little pains to avoid. Befides, they are both composed rather in the strain of panegyric than of history. An attentive reader will, however, fee without pain, even in thefe panegyrics, that CLEMENT XI., notwithstanding his acknowledged fagacity and prudence, took feveral rath and inconfiderate steps, in order to augment the power, and multiply the prerogatives of the Roman pontifs: and thus, through his awa temerity, involved himself in various perplexities. CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PARTI.

The attempts mide by the church of Rome, to express the Protestants and ruin their cause.

II. The incredible pains that were taken by the pontifs and clergy of the Romifn Church, to foread their doctrine and to erect their dominion among the nations that lay in the darkness of Paganifin, have been already mentioned. We are, therefore, at present, to confine our narration to the schemes they laid, the cabals they formed, and the commotions they excited, with an uninterrupted and mischicvous industry, in order to recover the possessions and prerogatives they had lost in Europe, to oppress the Protestants, and to extinguish the light of the glorious Reformation. Various were the firatagems and projects they formed for these purposes. The resources of genius, the force of arms, the feduction of the most alluring promifes, the terrors of the most formidable threatenings, the fubtle wiles of controverly, the influence of pious, and often of impious frauds, the arts of diffinulation, in fhort, all poffible means, fair and difingenuous, were employed for the destruction of the Reformed churches. but in most cases without success. The plan of a dreadful attack upon the friends of the Reformatien had been, for feme time, laid in fecret, and the bigoted and perfecuting house of Austria was pitched upon to put it in execution. However, as injuffice is follow to infolent as not to feek for fome protexts to made, or at least to diminish, its deformity, fo the church of Rome endeavoured before-hand to justify the perfecution of which the flame was ready to break out. For this purpofe the pens of the perfidious and learned Sciop-FIUS [n], of the fefuits TANNER, Possevin,

10° [a] Scientius feems rather to merit the titles of malerefer and fevicus than that of prefideur, unless his turning papit he confidered by Dr. Mospers as an infance of perfidy. This is the intemperate and odious fatyrill who was caned by the fevente of the English ambalance at Murrill, for the invertices he had thrown out against King James L, in a book which was burnt by the kinds of the common hangman at Farr. Hager, Hederic, and Forer, jurifts of Dilligen, CENT. were employed to represent the treaty of peace, sicr. II. made between CHARLES V. and the Protestants of PART I. Germany, as unjust, null, and even rendered void by the Protestants themselves, by their departing from, or at least perverting, by various changes and modifications, the confession of Augsburg [0]. This injurious charge was proved groundless by feveral Lutheran doctors, who, of their own accord, defended their communion against this instance of popish calumny; but it was also resuted by public authority, even by the express order of JOHN GEORGE, elector of Saxony. The talk was committed to MATTHEW Hoe, who, in the years 1628 and 1631, published, in two volumes, an accurate and laborious defence of the Protestants, entitled, Defensio Pupilla Evangeline. The mouth of calumny was not stopped by these performances. The accusers continued their clamours, multiplied their libels, and had recourse to the fuccours of indecent raillery and farcaftical wit to cover, as well as they were able, the triking defects of a bad cause. On the other hand the Lutheran writers exerted themfelves in exposing the fophiltry and refuting the arguments and invectives of their adverturies.

HI. The first flames of that religious war, Commonition which the Roman pontifs proposed to carry on Junia and by the arms of the light and Standards their Between. by the arms of the Antirians and Spaniards, their fervile and bigotted inflraments, broke out in Auftria, where, about the commencement of this century, the riends of the Reformation were cruelly perfected and oppressed by their Roman-Catholic advertises [4]. The folemn treaties and

^[0] See Christ. Aug. Selio, Hifter August. Confessions, tom i. the iv. on . the p. 76... [6] Kaupachue, i.e. the August Evangelica (a German work with a Latin title), has given an accurate account of this perfecution and conventions, by which the religious liberty and civil rights of these Protestants had been secured, were trampled upon and violated in the most shocking manner; nor had these unhappy fufferers resolution, vigour, or strength sufficient to maintain their privileges. The Bohemians, who were involved in the fame vexations, proceeded in a different manner. Perceiving plainly that the votaries of Rome aimed at nothing less than to deprive them of that religious liberty that had been purchased by the blood of their ancestors, and fo lately confirmed to them by an imperial edict, they came to a resolution of opposing force to force, and of taking up arms to defend themselves against a set of men whom, in consequence of the violence they offered to conscience, they could look upon in no other light than as the enemies of their fouls. Accordingly a league was formed by the Bohemian Protestants, and they began to avenge, with a great spirit and resolution, the injuries that had been committed against their persons, their families, their religion, and their civil rights and privileges. But it must be confessed, that, in this just attempt to defend what was dear to them as men and Christians. they lost fight of the dictates of equity and moderation, and carried their refentment beyond the bounds both of reason and religion. Their adverfaries were ftruck with terror at a view of their intrepidity, but were not difmayed. The Boheperfection and these commotions. The same learned and worthy author had formed the design of publishing an authentic and circumstantial relation of the sufferings of the Protestants in Stiria, Moravia, and Corinthia, with an account of the perfidious shares that were laid for them, the whole drawn from unexceptionable records; but death prevented the execution of this design.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

mians, therefore, apprehending still further op- CENT. position and vexations from bigotry, animated by SECT. II. a spirit of vengeance, renewed their efforts to PART I. provide for their fecurity. The death of the emperor MATTHIAS, which happened in the year 1619, furnished them, as they thought, a fair opportunity of striking at the root of the evil, and removing the fource of their calamities, by choofing a fovereign of the reformed religion; for they confidered themselves as authorized by the ancient laws and customs of the kingdom, to reject any that pretended to the throne by virtue of an hereditary right, and to demand a prince, whose title to the crown should be derived from the free fuffrages of the states. Accordingly FREDERICK V., elector Palatine, who professed the Reformed religion, was, in the year 1619, chosen king of Bohemia, and solemnly crowned at Prague $\lceil q \rceil$.

IV. This bold step, from which the Bohe-min way. mians expected fuch fignal advantages, proved to Frederic V. them a fource of complicated misfortunes. Its consequences were fatal to their new sovereign, and to their own liberties and privileges; for by it they were involved in the most dreadful calamities, and deprived of the free exercise of the Protestant religion, the security of which was the ultimate end of all the measures they had purfued. Frederic was defeated, before Prague, by the imperial army, in the year 1620, and by this unfortunate battle was not only deprived of his new crown, but also of his hereditary domi-

[q] Befides CAROLI and JAGERUS, who have composed the Ecclefiatical History of this Century, fee Burch. Gotth. Struvii Syntagma Historia Germanica, p. 1487. 1510. 1523. 1538.; as also the writers which he recommends. See also the Hiftoire de Louis XIII., composed by the learned and acgurate LE VASSOR, tom. iii. p. 223.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PARTI.

nions. Reduced thus to the wretched condition of an exile, he was obliged to leave his fruitful territories and his ample treasures to the merciless differetion of the Austrians and Bavarians, who plundered and ravaged them with the most rapacious barbarity. The defeat of this unfortunate prince was attended with dreadful confequences to the Bohemians, and more especially to those who, from a zeal for religious liberty and the interests of the Reformation, had embarked in his cause. Some of them were committed to a perpetual prison, others builfied for life; several had their estates and possessions confiscated; many were put to death; and the whole nation was obliged, from that fatal period, to embrace the religion of the victor, and bend their unwilling necks under the yoke of Rome. The triumph of the Austrians would neither have been fo fudden nor fo complete, nor would they have been in a condition to impose such rigorous and despotic terms on the Bohemians, had they not been powerfully affifted by John George I., elector of Saxony, who, partly from a principle of hatred towards the Reformed [r], and partly from confiderations of a political kind, reinforced with his troops, the imperial army [s]. This invalion of the Palatinate was to [r] By the Reformed, as has been already observed, we are to understand the Galwingles, and also, in general, all Protestants that are not of the Lutheren persuasion. And here we see a Lutheren elector drawing his sword to support the cause of poperty and persecution against a people generously struggling for the Protestant Religion, and the rights of conscience.

^[3] See the Commonnii de Bella Bebenico-Germanico, ab A. C. 1617 at Al. 1630, in 4to.—ABRAHAM SCULTET, Narratio Atologiciea de Corrierlo Vita fux, p. 86.—It is well known, that the Roman Catholice, and more especially Martin Brean, a Jesuit, persuaded Matthew Hor, who was an Austrian by birth, and the elector's chaplain, to represent to his prince the cause of the Elector Putatine (which was the cause of the Espenaed Religiou) as not only unjust, but also as detrimental to the interests of Luiberansin, and to recommend was the occasion of that long and bloody war, CENT. that was fo fatal to Germany, and in which the SECT. II. greatest part of the princes of Europe were, one PART I. way or another, unhappily engaged. It began by a confederacy formed between fome German powers and the king of Denmark, in order to affert the rights of the elector Palatine, unjustly excluded from his dominions, against the despotic proceedings of the emperor. The confederates maintained, that the invafion of Bokemia, by this unhappy prince, was no just subject of offence to the emperor; and that the house of Austria, whose quarrel the emperor was not obliged by any means to adopt, was alone the fufferer in this case. However that may have been, the progress and issue of the war were unfavourable to the allies.

V. The fuccess of the imperial arms filled the The provotaries of Popery and Rome with the warmost German or transports of joy and exultation, and presented to Bobenian their imaginations the most flattering prospects. They thought that the happy period was now approaching, when the whole tribe of heretics, that had withdrawn their necks from the papal yoke, should either perish by the sword, or be reduced under the dominion of the church. The emperor himself feemed to have imbibed no small portion of this odious spirit, which was doubly prepared, to convert or to destroy. The slame of ambition that burned within him, was nourished by the fuggestions of bigotry. Hence he auto him the cause and interests of the House of Austria. See Unschuldige Nachrid, A. 1747. p. 858. P What Dr. Mosheim observes here may be true; but then it is as true, that MATTHEW Hise mult have been a great fool, or a great knave, to liden to fuch influentions, not only on account of their glaving abfurdity, but also considering the persons from whom they came. This is the same rios that is mentioned above as a learned defender of the Lutheran faith.

CENT. XVII. Sect. II. PART I.

daciously carried his arms through a great part of Germany, fuffered his generals to vex with impunity those princes and states which refused a blind obedience to the court of Rome, and shewed plainly, by all his proceedings, that a scheme had been laid for the extinction of the Germanic liberty, civil and facred. The elector of Saxony's zealous attachment to the emperor, which he had abundantly difcovered by his warm and ungenerous opposition to the unfortunate Frederic, together with the lamentable difcord that reigned among the German princes, perfuaded the papal faction, that the difficulties which feemed to oppose the execution of their project, were far from being invincible. Accordingly the persons concerned in this grand enterprife began to act their respective parts. In the year 1629, FERDINAND II., to give some colour of justice to this religious war, issued out the terrible restitution-edicl, by which the Protestants were ordered to restore to the church of Rome all the possessions they had become mafters of in confequence of the religious peace, concluded in the preceding century [t]. This edict was principally owing to the fuggeftions of the Jesuits. That greedy and ambitious Order claimed a great part of these goods and possessions as a recompence due to their labours in the cause of religion; and hence arose a warm contest between them and the ancient and real proprietors [u]. This contest indeed was decided by the law of force. It was the depopulating foldier, who, fword in hand, gave weight and authority to the imperial edict, wrefling out of the hands of the lawful possessor, without form of C E N T. RVII. process, whatever the Romish priests and monks SECT. II. thought proper to claim, and treating the inno- PART I. cent and plundered fufferers with all the feverity that the most barbarous spirit of oppression and injustice could suggest [v].

[u] See Christ. Aug. Salig, Histor. August. Confessionie, tom. i. lib. iv. cap. iii. § xxv. p. 810.

^[1] See for an illustration of this matter, the authors mentioned by STRUVIUS, in his Syntagma Histor. Germania, p. 1553.

VI. Germany groaned under these dismal scenes Adolphus of tumult and oppression, and looked about for intervenes. fuccour in vain. The enemy encompassed her on all fides, and none of her princes feemed qualified to stand forth as the avenger of her injuries, or the affertor of her rights. Some were re-ftrained from appearing in her cause by the fug-gestions of bigotry, others by a principle of fear, years war. and others again by an ungenerous attention to their own private interest, which choked in their breafts all concern for the public good. An illustrious hero, whose deeds even envy was obliged to revere, and whose name will descend with glory to the latest ages, came forth, neverthelese, at this critical feafon; Gustavus Adolphus took the field, and maintained the cause of the Germanic liberties against the oppression and

When the confequences of these iniquitous and barbarous proceedings were reprefented to this Emperor, and he was affered that the country must be utterly ruined, in case the Bohemians, rendered desperate by his enormous cruelty and oppression, should exert themselves in desence of their liberties, and endeavour to repel force by force; he is reported to have answered, with great zeal and colmness, Malumus regnum vaslatum, quam damnatum. See the Historia Persecutionum Ecclesia Bohemica, &c. p. 152. a work published (probably in Holland, as would seem by the type) in the year 1648, in 24to. This little book contains an ample recital of the deplorable effects of lawless power, in human bigotry and blood-thirsty zeal; and proves, by numberless facts, that Dr. Mosheim had the strongest evidences for the account he gives of FERDINAND and his missionaries. It is impossible to reflect upon the sanguinary manner of fuch converters, without expreffing, at the fame time, a generous deteftation and abhorrence of their unjust and violent proceedings. N.

CENT. tyranny of the house of Austria. At the earnest SECT. II. request of the French court, which beheld, with PART I. uneafiness, the overgrown power of that aspiring house, he fet fail for Germany, in the year 1629, with a fmall army; and, by his repeated victories, blafted, in a fhort time, the fanguine hopes which the pope and emperor had entertained of fuppressing the Protestant religion in the empire. These hopes, indeed, seemed to revive in the year 1632, when this glorious affertor of Germanic liberty fell in the battle of Lutzen [w]; but this unspeakable loss was, in some measure, made up in process of time, by the conduct of those who fucceeded Gustavus at the head of the Swedish army. And, accordingly, the war was obstinately carried on in bleeding Germany, during many years, with various fuccess, until the exhausted treasures of the contending parties, and the pacific inclinations of CHRISTINA, the daughter and fuccessor of Gustavus, put an end to these desolations, and brought on a treaty of peace.

The peace of Wellpha-412.

VII. Thus, after a war of thirty years, carried on with the most unrelenting animosity and ardour, the wounds of Germany were closed, and the drooping states of Europe were revived, in the year 1648, by the peace of Westphalia, fo called from the cities of Munster and Ofnaburg, where the negociations were held, and that famous treaty concluded. The Protestants, indeed, did not derive from this treaty all the privileges they claimed, nor all the advantages they had in view;

^[70] See ARCKENHOLTZ, Memoires de la Reine Chrisline, tom. i. p. 7-20. in which there are many very interesting anecdotes relating to the life, exploits, and death, of Gustavus. The learned compiler of these secondry has also thrown much light upon this period, and of the peace that terminated this long and dreadful war.

stances of obstinacy, absolutely refused to re- SECT. H. instate the Bohemian and Austrian Protestants in their religious privileges, or to restore the Upper Palatinate to its ancient and lawful proprietor. But they, nevertheless, obtained by this peace, privileges and advantages which the votaries of Rome beheld with much displeasure and uneasiness; and it is unquestionably evident, that the treaty of Westphalia gave a new and remarkable degree of stability to the Lutheran and Reformed churches in Germany. By this treaty the peace of Augsburg, which the Eutherans had obtained from CHARLES V. in the preceding century, was firmly fecured against all the machinations and stratagems of the court of Rome; by it the restitutionedict, which commanded the Protestants to restore to the Romish church the ecclesiastical revenues and lands they had taken possession of after that peace, was abrogated, and both the contending parties confirmed in the perpetual and uninterrupted possession of whatever they had occupied in the beginning of the year 1624. It would be entering into a very long detail, were we to enumerate the advantages that accrued to the Protestant princes from this treaty [x]. All this was [x] An account of this whole matter, fufficient to fatisfy the curiofity of the most inquisitive reader, may be found in that most elaborate and excellent work, compiled by the very learned and judicious John Codfry de Meyern, under the following title: Aca Pacis Westphalica et Executionis ejus Norimbergonsis. See also the more compendious, though valuable work of Adams, Bishop of Hierapolis, entitled, Relatio Historica de Pacisficatione Opiabrugo Monasseriens; of which the illustrious author published a new edition at Leipsick, in the year 1737, more accurate and ample than the preceding one. We must not omit here the ingenious Father Boughant's elegant history of this treaty, which, though chiefly drawn from the papers of the French ambassadors, is, nevertheless, generally speaking, composed with accuracy, impartiality, and candour; it was published at Paris, in the year 1746, in fix volumes in 8vo, under the title of Histoire de la Paix de Westphalie.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PARTI. a fource of vexation to the court of Rome, and made its pontif feel the feverest pangs of disappointed ambition. He, accordingly, used various frategoms, without being very forugulous in the choice, in order to annul this treaty, or elude its effects; but his attempts were unfucceisful, fince neither the emperor, nor the princes that had embarked in this cause, thought it adviseable to involve themselves anew in the tumults of war. whose iffue is so uncertain, and whose most fatal effects they had lately escaped with so much difficulty. The treaty, therefore, was executed in all its parts; and all the articles that had been agreed upon at Munster and Osnaburg were confirmed and ratified, in the year 1650, at Nuremberg [v].

The Proteflant-vexed and perfecuted by Rome and its votaries.

VIII. After this period, the Court of Rome and its creatures were laid under a confiderable degree of referaint. They did not any longer dare to make war in an open and public manner upon the Protestants, fince the present state of things blaffed all the hopes they had fondly entertained of extinguishing the light of the reformation, by destroying or reducing under their ghost-Iv volve the princes and flates that had encouraged and moded it in their territories. But whereever a recould exert the fpirit of perfecution with imposity, there they opprefied the Protestants in the mon prinyous manner, and, in defiance of the most normal conventions and of the most facred obligación, encreached upon abeir rights, prireceived, and possessions. Thus in Hungary, during the space of ten years [z], both Lutherans c EN T. and Calvinists were involved in an uninterrupted SECT. II, feries of the most cruel calamities and vexations $\lceil a \rceil$. The injuries and infults they fuffered at the hands of many orders of men, and more especially of the Jesuits, both before and after the period now under confideration, are not to be numbered. In Poland, all those who ventured to differ from the Pope, found, by a bitter experience, during the whole course of this century, that no treaty or convention that tended to fet bounds to the authority or rapacity of the church, was held facred or even regarded at Rome. For many of these were ejected out of their schools, deprived of their churches, robbed of their goods and possessions under a variety of persidious pretexts; nay, frequently condemned to the most fevere and cruel punishments, without having been even chargeable with the appearance of a crime $\lceil b \rceil$. The remains of the Waldenses, that lived in the vallies of Picdmont, were perfecuted often with the most inhuman cruelty (and more especially in the years 1632, 1655, and 1685), on account of their magnanimous and stedfast attachment to the religion of their anceftors; and this perfecution was carried on with all the horrors of fire and fword by the Dukes of Savey [c].

Fig. Para Landers of Responding to the many of peace, in the control of the second of

 ^[2] From 1671 to 1681.
 [a] See Hifforia Diplomatica de Statu Religionis Evangelies în Hungariâ, p. 69.—Pauli Debrezeni Historia Ecclefic Reformate in Hungarid, lib. ii. p. 447.—Schelhornius, in Museo Helvetico, tom. vii. p. 46-90.

[[]b] See An. REGENVOLSCHII Hillsria Ecclefia Sclavonia, lib. ii. cap. xv. p. 216. 235. 253.—The grievances which the Diffenters from the Church of Rome fullered in Poland after RECENVOLSCIUS, may be learned from various Memorials that have been published in our times.

[[]c] See Gilles Hifloire Ecclefioflique des Fyllfes Vaudeif's, published at Gineva in 4to, in the year 1656, chap, xlvan.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PARTI.

In Germany, the fame spirit of bigotry and persecution produced almost every where flagrant acts of injustice. The infractions of the famous treaty above mentioned, and of the Germanic liberty that was founded upon it, would furnish matter for many volumes [d]; and all these infractions were owing to a preposterous and extravagant zeal for augmenting the authority, and extending the jurisdiction, of the Church of Rome. And, indeed, as long as that church and its affuming pontif shall persist in maintaining that they have a right to extend their lordly fceptre over all the churches of the Christian world, fo long must those who have renounced their authority, but are more or less within their reach, despair of enjoying the inestimable blessings of security and peace. will always be confidered as rebellious fubjects, against whom the greatest acts of severity and violence are lawful.

The Moors banished out of Spiin and the Protestants perfecuted in France.

IX. The zealous instruments of the Court of Rome accomplished, at length, in this century, what had often been attempted without fuccess, by delivering Spain from the infidelity of the Moors, and France from the herefy of the Protestants. The posterity of the Moors or Saracens, who had formerly been masters of a great part of Spain, had hitherto lived in that kingdom mixed with the other inhabitants of the country, and their number was still considerable. They were Christians, at least in their external profession and manners; industrious also, and inosfensive; and, upon the whole, good and ufeful fubjects: But they were grossly suspected of a secret propensity to the doctrine of MAHOMET, which was the religion of their ancestors. Hence the clergy beset C E N T. the monarch with their importunate solicitations, S E C T. I. and never ceased their clamorous remonstrances PART I. before a royal edict was obtained to drive the Saracens, whose numbers were prodigious, out of the Spanish territories. This imprudent step was highly detrimental to the kingdom of Spain, and its pernicious effects are more or lefs visible even at the present times; but the church, whose interests and dominion are, in Popish countries, confidered as diffinct from the interests and authority of state, and of a much more sublime and excellent nature, acquired new accessions of wealth and power by the expulsion of the Moors $\lceil e \rceil$. In proportion as the community loft, the church gained; and thus the public good was facrificed to the demands of bigotry and superstition.

[[]d] The Hiflories of the grievances fuffered by the Protestants of Germany on account of their religion, that have been composed by STRUVIUS and HOFFMAN, contain ample details of this matter.

In France, the perfecuting spirit of the Church of Rome exhibited scenes still more shocking. The Protestants of that kingdom, commonly called Huguenots, after having groaned, for a long space of time, under various forms of cruelty and oppression, and seen multitudes of their brethren put to death, by fecret conspiracies or open tyranny and violence, were, at length, obliged either to fave themselves by a clandestine slight, or to profess, against their consciences, the Romish religion. This barbarous and iniquitous scene of French perfecution, than which the annals of modern history present nothing more unnatural and odious, will find its place below, in the history of the Reformed Church $\lceil f \rceil$.

X. All the refources of inventive genius and The court refined policy, all the efforts of infinuating craft of kome tails and audacious rebellion, were employed to bring tempton on Engla.

[[]e] See Michael Gedders's Hiftery of the Expulsion of the Mirry's out of Spain, in his Miscellaneous Trads, vol. i. p. 59.
[f] In the second chapter of the second part of this section.

PARTI.

CENT. back Great Britain and Ireland under the yoke of SECT. II. Rome. But all these attempts were without effect. About the beginning of this century, a fet of defperate and execrable wretches, in whose breasts the fuggestions of bigotry, and the hatred of the Protestant religion, had suppressed all the feelings of justice and humanity, were instigated by three Tefuits, of whom GARNET, the superior of the society in England, was the chief, to form the most horrid plot that is known in the annals of history. The defign of this conspiracy was nothing less than to destroy, at one blow, JAMES I., the Prince of Wales, and both Houses of Parliament, by the explosion of an immense quantity of gun-powder, which was concealed, for that purpole, in the vaults that lay under the House of Lords. The fanguinary bigots concerned in it imagined, that, as foon as this horrible deed was performed, they would be at full liberty to restore Popery to its former credit, and fubilitute it in the place of the Protestant religion $\lceil g \rceil$. This odious conspiracy, whose infernal purpose was providentially discovered, when it was ripe for execution, is commonly known in Britain under the denomination of the gun-powder treason [b].

This discovery did not suspend the efforts and stratagems of the Court of Rome, which carried

[b] See Rapin Thoyras, Hiftine d'Angleterre, livr. xviii. tom. vii. p. 40.—Jo. Henr. Heideggeri Hiftoria Papatus, Period. & vii. p. 211. 291, &c.

^{([}g] There is a letter extant, written by Sir EVERARD DIGBY, one of the conspirators, to his wife, after his condemnation, which deserves an eminent place in the history of superflition and bigotry, and shews abundantly their infernal spirit and tendency. The following paffage will confurn this judgment : " Now for my intention, fays DIGBY, let me tell you, " that, if I had thought there had been the least fin in the plot, I " would not have been of it for all the world; and no other cause " drew me to bazard my fortune and life but zeal to God's reli-" gion." See the Papers relating to the Popish Plot, published by the orders of Secretary COVENTRY.

PART I.

on its schemes in the succeeding reign, but with c ENT. less violence, and more caution. CHARLES I. was SECT. II. a prince of a foft and gentle temper, and was entirely directed by the counfels of LAUD, archbishop of Canterbury, a man who was neither destitute of learning nor good qualities [i], though he carried things to excessive and intolerable lengths, through his warm and violent attachment to the ancient rites and ceremonies of the church; the Queen, on the other hand, who was a princefs of France, was warmly devoted to the interests of Popery; and from all this it feemed probable enough, that, though treason and violence had failed, yet artifice and mild measures might fucceed, and that a reconciliation might be brought about between England and Rome [j]. This prospect, which had fmiled in the imaginations of the friends of Popery, vanished entirely when the civil war broke out between the King and Parliament. In confequence of these commotions, both the unfortunate CHARLES and his imprudent and bigotted counfellor LAUD were brought to the fcaffold; and OLIVER CROMWELL, a man of unparalleled refolution, dexterity, and forefight, and a declared enemy to every thing that bore even the most distant resemblance of popery, was placed at the helm of government, under the title of Protector of the commonwealth of England.

The hopes of Rome and its votaries were, nevertheless, revived by the restoration of CHARLES II., and from that period grew more lively and See Hume's History of Great Britain, vol. v. p. 193.

[j] See Urean Cerri, Etat Profest de l'Eglife Romaine, p. 315.—Neal's History of the Paritain, vol. iii. p. 194.

[[]i] Mr. Hume, speaking of Laur's learning and morals, expresses himself in the following manner: "This man " was virtuous, if feverity of monners alone, and abilinence " from pleafure, could deferve that name. He was learned, " if polemical knowledge could entitle him to that praise."

CENT. fanguine from day to day. For that monarch, as appears from unquestionable authorities $\lceil k \rceil$, had SECT. II. PART I. been initiated, during his exile, into the mysteries of popery, and had fecretly embraced that religion, while his only brother, the prefumptive heir to the crown, professed it openly, and had publicly apostatized from the Protestant faith. CHARLES, indeed, was not a proper infrument for the propagation of any theological fystem. Indolent and voluptuous on the one hand, and inclined to infidelity and irreligion on the other, it was not from him that the Roman pontif could expect that zeal and industry, that were necessary to force upon the English nation a religion fo contrary to the tenor of the laws and the iprit of the people as popery was [1]. This zeal was

[k] Burnet's History of his oven Times, vol. i. book iii. p. 603. 606.—Neal's History of the Puritums, vol. iv. p. 233. 237. 534.—Rapin Thoyras, History de l'Angliterre, livr.

xxiii. vol. ix. p. 160.

[1] Such is the representation given of CHARLES II. by all historians; so that Dr. Mosheim is excusable in mistaking a part of this monarch's character, which was known to very few before him. Mr. Hume, whose history of the reign of that prince is a maîter-piece in every respect, gave a like account of CHARLES, as fluctuating between Deifm and Popery. But this eminent historian having had occasion, during his refidence at Paris, to perufe the manufcript-memoirs of King JAMES II., which were written by himself, and are kept in the Scots College there, received from them new information with respect to the religious character of CHARLES; and was convinced that his zeal for Popery went much farther than has been generally imagined. For it appears, with the utmost evidence, from these memoirs, that the King had laid with his ministry a formal plan for subverting the constitution in fayour of Popery; that the introduction of Popery, as the establifhed religion, was the great and principal object which CHARLES had in view when he entered into the French alliance, which was concluded at Verfailles in the end of 1669, or beginning of 1670, by Lord Arunder of Wardour. By this treaty, Lewis was to give Charles 200,000 pounds a year, in quarterly payments, in order to enable him to establish the Roman Catholic religion in England; and to supply

XVII. PART L

found in his bigotted fucceffor JAMES II.; but it CENT. was accompanied with fuch excessive vehemence SECT, II. and imprudence as entirely defeated its own purposes; for that inconsiderate monarch, by his passionate attachment to the court of Rome, and his blind obsequiousness to the unseasonable and precipitate counsels of the Jesuits, who were the oracles of his cabinet, gave a mortal blow to that religion which he meant to promote, and fell from the throne whose prerogatives he was attempting to augment and extend. Immediately on his accession to the crown, he openly attempted to re-ftore to its former vigour, both in England and Ireland, the authority of the Roman pontif, which had been renounced and annulled by the laws of both realms; and that he might accomplish with the more facility this most imprudent purpose, he trampled upon those rights and privileges of his people, that had ever been held most respectable and facred, and which he had bound himfelf, by the most folemn engagements, to support and maintain. Justly exasperated and provoked by repeated infults from the throne upon their religion and liberties, and alarmed with natural apprehensions of the approaching ruin of both; the English nation looked about for a deliverer, and fixed its views, in the year 1688, on WILLIAM prince of Orange, fon-in-law to their despotic him also with 6000 men, in case of any insurrection. The division of the United Provinces between England and France was another article of this treaty. But we are told, that the subversion of the Protestant religion in England was the point that CHARLES had chiefly at heart; and that he infifted warmly on beginning with the execution of this part of the treaty; but the Duchels of Orleans, in the interview at Dover, perfuaded him to begin with the Dutch war. The King (fays Mr. Hume) was so zealous a Papil, that he wept for joy when he entertained the project of re-uniting his kingdom to the Catholic Church. See the Corrections and Additions to Mr. HUME'S Hiftory of Charles II., p. 238. in the note.

SECT. II. PART I.

CENT. monarch, by whose wisdom and valour things XVII.

SECT. II. were so conducted, that JAMES was obliged to retire from his dominions and to abdicate the crown; and the Roman pontif, with all his adherents, were disappointed in the fond expectations they had formed of restoring popery in England [m].

Milder methods are emilloyed by Rome against the Prote.tanz cauto.

XI. When the more prudent defenders and patrons of the Romish faith perceived the ill success that attended all their violent and fanguinary attempts to establish its authority, they thought it expedient to have recourse to softer methods; and instead of conquering the Protestants by open force, proposed deluding them back into the church of Rome by the infinuating influence of fecret artifice. This way of proceeding was approved by many of the votaries of Rome; but they were not all agreed about the particular manner of employing it, and therefore followed different methods. Some had recourse to the appointment of public disputations or conferences between the principal doctors of the contending parties; and this from a notion, which past experience had rendered fo yum and chimerical, that the adversaries of popery would either be vanquished in the debate, or at least he persuaded to look upon the Roman-catholics with less averfion and difgust. Others declared it as their opinion, that all contest was to be suspended; that the great point was to find out the proper method of reconciling the two churches; and that, in order to promote this falutary purpose, as little stress as possible was to be laid upon those matters of controverfy that had been hitherto CENT. looked upon as of the highest moment and importance. A different manner of proceeding was thought more adviseable by a third fet of men, who, from a perfuasion that their doctors had more zeal than argument, and were much more eminent for their attachment to the church of Rome, than for their skill in defending its cause, prepared their combatants with greater care for the field of controverly, taught them a new art of theological war, and furnished them with a new and fubtle method of vanquishing, or at least of perplexing, their heretical adversaries.

[[]m] The circumstances of this famous and ever memorable revolution are accurately recorded by BURNET, in the fecond volume of his Hiftory of his own Times; and also by RAPIN, in NEAL'S Hiftery of the Puritans, vol. iv. ch. xi. p. 536.

fible

XII. There was a famous conference held at Theological conferences held be held be MAXIMILIAN, duke of Bavaria, and PHILIPLEWIS, doctions of elector Palatine, between fome eminent Lutheran both churches, doctors on the one fide, and three celebrated Jefuits on the other. The difpute turned upon the two great points, to which almost all the contests between the Protestants and Roman-catholics are reducible, even the rule of faith and the judge of controversies. In the year 1615, a conference was held at Newburg, between James Heilbronner, a learned Lutheran, and JAMES KELLER, a celebrated Jesuit, by the appointment of Wolfgang WILLIAM, prince Palatine, who had a little before that time embraced the Romish faith. But the most famous of all these conserences was that held in the year 1645, at Thorn, by the express order of ULADISLAUS IV., king of Poland, between feveral eminent doctors of the Romish, Lutheran, and Reformed churches. This meeting, which was defigned to heal the division that reigned among these churches, and to find out some method of reconciling their differences, and bringing about their re-union, was thence called the Charitable Conference. Some time after this, ER-NEST, Landgrave of Heffe, in order to give a plau-

XVII. SECT. II. PARTI.

CENT. fible colour to his apostasy from the Protestant religion, and make it appear to be the refult of examination and conviction, obliged VALERIANUS Magnus, a learned Capuchin, to enter the lifts with PETER HABERCORN, a reformed minister in the castle of Rheinfeldt. Besides these public conferences, there were others of a more private nature held, during this century, between the doctors of the contending churches. The most remarkable of these was the famous dispute between John Claude, the most learned of the Reformed divines in France, and JAQUES BENIGNE DE Bossuer, whose genius and erudition placed him at the head of the Romish doctors in that country. This dispute, which was held in the year 1683, ended like all the rest. They all widened the breach instead of healing it. Neither of the contending parties could be perfuaded to yield $\lceil n \rceil$; on the contrary, they both returned from the field of controverfy more rivetted in their own opinions, and more averse to those of their adverfaries.

The methods of reconciliation employed. by the Roman-catholics,

XIII. Those of the Roman-Catholics, whose views were turned towards union and concord, did not omit the use of pious artifice and stratagem, in order to accomplish this falutary purpose. They endeavoured to perfuade the zealous Protestants and the rigid Catholics, that their differ-

[[]n] The reader who defires a more particular account of what passed in these conferences, may fatisfy his curiofity by consulting the writers mentioned by SAGITTARIUS, in his Introduct. in Historiam Eccleshoft. tom. ii. p. 1569. 1581. 1592. 1598. An account of the conference between CLAUDE and BOSSUET was composed and published by each of these famous combatants. Dossuer's account was thus entitled: Conference avec M. CLAUDE, fur la matiere de l'Eglife, Paris 1683, in 12mo. This account was answered by CLAUDE, in his Response au Livre de M. DE MEAUX, intitulé, Conference avec M. CLAUDE, published at the Hague in Svo in the year 1683.

ences in opinion were less confiderable, and less cent. important, than they themselves imagined; and SECT. II. that the true way to put an end to their dissen-PART I. fions, and to promote their union, was not to nourish the flames of discord by disputes and conferences, but to fee whether their fystems might not be reconciled, and their apparent inconfiftences removed, by proper and candid explications. They imagined that an artful exposition of those doctrines of the church of Rome, that appeared the most shocking to the Protestants, would tend much to conquer their aversion to Popery. Such was the general principle in which the Romish peace-makers agreed, and such the basis on which they proposed to carry on their pacific operations; but they differed fo widely in their manner of applying this general principle, and purfued fuch different methods in the execution of this nice and perilous stratagem, that the event did not answer their expectations. In the way they proceeded, instead of promoting the defired union by their representations of things, by their exhortations and counfels, this union feemed to be previously necessary, in order to render their explications and exhortations acceptable, nay even supportable; so little were the means proportioned to the end!

The first and most eminent of those who tried the force of their genius in this arduous enterprise was Cardinal RICHELIEU, that great minister, who employed all the influence of promifes and threatenings, all the powers of fophistry and eloquence, all the arts of perfuafion, in order to bring back the French Protestants into the boson. of the Romish church [0]. The example of this

^[0] Rich. Simon, Lettres Choisies, tom. i. p. 31, 32. new edit .- BAYLE's Dictionary, at the article AMYRAUT, note 1: at the article Beaulieu, note c; at the article Ferry, note D; at the article MILLETIERE.

SECT. II. PART I.

illustrious prelate was followed, but with less dignity and less influence, by MASENIUS, a German Jefuit $\lceil p \rceil$, Volusius, a theologist of Mentz $\lceil q \rceil$, PRÆTORIUS, a Prussian [r], GIBBON DE BURG, an Irish doctor, who was professor at Erfurth [s], MARCELLUS, a Jesuit [t], and other divines of inferior note. But of all modern adepts in controverfy, none purfued this method with fuch dexterity and art as Bossuer, bishop of Meaux, a man of true genius, directed by the most consummate circumspection and prudence. The famous Exposition of the Roman-Catholic Faith, that was drawn up by this fubtle and infinuating author, was defigned to shew the Protestants, that their reasons against returning to the bosom of the Romish church would be foon and eafily removed, provided they would view the doctrines of that church in their true light, and not as they had been erroneously represented by the Protestant writers $\lceil u \rceil$. This notion was propagated, though

[p] See FRID. SPANHEMII Stridura ad Bossueti Expositionem Fidei Catholica, tom. iii. opp. Theolog. par. II. p. 1042. [q] There is extant a book composed by this writer under the following title: Aurora Pacis religiofic divine Veritati amica.

Mogunt. 1665, 4to. [r] In his Tuba Pacis, of which the reader may fee a curious account in BAYLE's Nouvelles de la Rejublique des Lettres, for the year 1685, p. 1309.

[s] In a treatife, entitled, Luthero Calvinifmus schismaticus quidem sed reconciliabilis.

[t] The book of MARCELLUS, entitled, Sapientia pacifica, was refuted by Seldius, at the express define of the Duke of Saxe-Gotha.

[u] This book might furnish subject for a multitude of reflections. See a particular account of its history and its effects in PFAFF's Historia Literaria Theologia, tom. ii. p. 102.; and LE CLERC'S Bibliotheque Univerfelle et Historique, com. xi. p. 438. The is remarkable, that nine years pulled before this book could obtain the Pope's approbation. CLEMENT X. refused it positively. Nay, several Roman Catholic priests were rigorously treated, and severely persecuted, for preaching the doctrine contained in the expedition of Bossurt, which was, moreover₂ with less dexterity and success, by Dezius, a Je- cent. fuit of Strasburg, who wrote a book expressly to Sect. H. prove, that there was little or no difference be- FART I. tween the doctrine of the council of Trent, and that of the confession of Aug fourg, than which no two fystems can be more irreconcilably oppofite [w]. It is however remarkable, that all thefe pacific attempts to re-unite the two churches, were made by the persons now mentioned, on moreover, formally condemned by the University of Louvain, in the year 1685, and declared to be feandalous and pernicious. The Sorbonne also disavowed the dostrine contained in that book, though by a late edict we learn, that the fathers of that theological feminary have changed their opinion on that head, and thus given a new instance of the variations that reign in the Romish Church, which boasts so much of its uniformity in doctrinal matters. The artifice that was employed in the composition of this book, and the tricks that were used in the suppression and alteration of the first edition that was given of it, have been detected with great fagacity and evidence by the learned and excellent Archbithep Warr, in the Introduction to his Exposition of the Doctrine of the Church of England, Sc. See also his two Defences of that Exposition, in which the perfidicus sophistry of Bossuer is unmasked and refuted in the most satisfactory manner. There was an excellent answer to Bossuer's book published by M. De LA BASTIDE, one of the most eminent Protestant ministers in France. This answer the French prelate took no notice of during eight years; at the end of which he published an advertisement, in a new edition of his Exposition, which was designed to remove the objections of LA BASTIDE. The latter replied in fuch a demonstrative and victorious manner, that the learned bithop, notwichshanding all his eloquence and art, was obliged to quit the field of controverly. See a very interesting account of this inhidious work of Bossurr, and the controverses it occasioned, in the Bibliotheque des Sciences, published at the Hague, vol. raii. p. 20. This account, which is curious, accurate, ample, and learned, was given partly on occasion of a new edition of the Emposition, printed at Peris in 1761, and accompanied with a Latin trapllation done by FLEURY, and profly on occasion of Buriony's Life of Roffact, published the fame year at Paris.

[40] This book is entitled, La Re-union des Protoficus de

Straffung à l'Egife Romaine, published in Evo at Straffung, in the year 1689.—See Phil. Jac. Spensen Confide Tool. German. pars iii. p. 650, 652.

SECT. II.

their own private authority; they were not avowed by the higher powers, who alone were quali-PART I fied to remove, modify, or explain away those doctrines and rites of the Romish church, that shocked the Protestants and justified their separation. It is true, indeed, that, in the year 1686, this plan of reconciliation was warmly recommended by a person properly commissioned, or, at least, who gave himself out for such. This pacificator was Christopher de Rohas, bishop of Tinia, in the district of Bosnia; who, during feveral years, frequented, with these reconciling views, the courts of the Protestant princes in Germany; intimated the affembling of a new council, that was to be more impartial in its decisions and less restrained in its proceedings than the council of Trent; nay, went still further, and assured the Protestants, that they should obtain without difficulty whatever rights, privileges, and immunities, they should think proper to demand from the Roman pontif, provided they would acknowledge his paternal authority, and no longer refuse a profound fubmission to his mild and gentle empire. But the artifice and defigus of this specious miffionary were eafily detected; the Protestant doctors, and also their sovereigns, soon perceived that a fair and candid plan of reconciliation and union was not what the court of Rome had in view; but that a scheme was laid for restoring its pontifs to their former despotic dominion over the Christian world [x].

[[]N] See Jo. WOLF. JAEGERI Historia Ecclesiast. Saculi xvii. -CHRIST. EBERHARDI WEISMANNI Hifl. Ecclefiaft. Saculi xvii. p. 735. The reader will find, in the Commercium Epiflolico-Leibnitianum of GRUBERUS *, an account of the particular conditions of reconciliation that were proposed, in the year 1660, to the German courts by the Elector of Mentz, authorized, as it is alleged, by the Roman pontif.

^{*} Tom. i. p. 411, 415. 426.

· XIV. The Romish peace-makers found among CENT. the Protestants, and more especially among those SECT. H. of the Reformed church, certain doctors, who, by a natural propenfity to union and concord, feconded perhaps, in some, by views of interest, or by peacethe fuggestions of ambition, were disposed to enter into their plan, and to affift them in the execution of it. These doctors maintained, that the points in debate between the two churches were not of fufficient importance to justify their separation. Among the French Protestants, Lewis LE BLANC and his disciples were suspected of an inclination to go too great lengths in this matter [y]. The fame accufation was brought, with fuller evidence, against Huisseaux, professor of divinity at Saumur, MILLETIERE, LE FEVRE, and others of lefs note [z]. Among the British divines, this excessive propensity to diminish the shocking abfurdities of Popery was less remarkable; WIL-LIAM FORBES was the principal person who discovered an extreme facility to compose a confiderable number of the differences that contributed to perpetuate the feparation between the two churches [a]. With respect to the Dutch, it is

PART I. Protestant

[y] See a particular and interesting account of LE BLANC

abundantly

in BAYLE's Dictionary, at the article BEAULIEU.

[z] See the above-mentioned Distinary, at the article MILLETIERE. For an account of HUISSEAUX, and his pacific counsels, see RICH. SIMON, Lettres choisies, tom. iii. p. 14. -AYMON, Synodes Nationaux des Eglises Reformées en France, tom. ii. p. 765 .- The labours of LE FEVRE, father to the famous Madam Dacier, in the same cause, are mentioned by Mornofius, in his Polyhistor. tom. i. p. 295.

[a] See FORBES's Confiderationes modeste et pacifica Controversiarum de Justificatione, Purgatorio, &c. which were published in 8vo at London in the year 1658, and afterwards, more correctly, in Germany, under the inspection of JOHN FABRIcius, professor of divinity at Helmstadt. Forbes is mentioned by GRABE with the highest encomiums, in his Nota ad Bulli Harmoniam Apollolicam, p. 19. and, if we confider his probity, and the exemplary regularity of his life and convertation, he

Vol. V.

C E N T. XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

abundantly known, how ardently the great and learned GROTIUS defired the re-union of all Christian churches in one general bond of charity and concord, and with what peculiar zeal he endeayoured to reform some enormities of the church of Rome, and to excuse others. But these, and all the other arbitrators, whose names and whose efforts in this pacific cause it would be tedious to mention, derived no other fruit from their, perhaps, well-intended labours, than the displeasure of both the contending parties, and the bitter re-proaches of their respective churches.

In the number of the Protestant doctors who discovered an inconsiderate zeal for the re-union of these churches, many writers place GEORGE CALIXTUS, a man of eminent learning, and professor of divinity in the University of Helmstadt. It is nevertheless certain, that this great man difcovered and exposed the errors and corruptions of Popery with a degree of learning and perfpicuity that was fcarcely surpassed by any writer of this century, and perfished stedfastly in maintaining, that the decrees and anathemas of the council of Trent had banished all hopes of a reconciliation between the Protestant churches and the see of Rome. It is true, indeed, that Calixtus looked upon fome of the controversies that divided the two communions with much more moderation and indulgence than was ufual, and decided them must be allowed to deferve the praise that is due to piety and good morals. Neverthelefs, he had his infirmities, and the wifer part of the English doctors acknowledge, that his propenfity towards a reconciliation with the Church of Rome was carried too far. See BURNET's Hillory of his own Times, vol. i. p. 21.—On this account he has been lavishly praised by the Roman Catholic writers; fee R. Simon, Lettres Choifies, tom. iii. lettr. xviii. p. 119.—He was, undoubtedly, one of those who contributed most to spread among the English a notion (whose truth or falsehood we shall not here examine), that King CHARLES I. and Archbishop LAUD had formed the defign of restoring Popery in England.

in a manner that did not feem fuited to the tafte C ENT. and spirit of the times: he was also of opinion, SECT. II. that the church of Rome had not destroyed the PART I. genuine principles of Christianity, but had only deformed them with its fenfeless fictions, and buried them under a heap of rubbish, under a motley multitude of the most extravagant and intolerable doctrines and ceremonies. It was undoubtedly on this account, that he has been ranked by some in the class of the imprudent peace-makers already mentioned.

XV. It was no difficult matter to defeat the The Popin Methodult. purpofes and ruin the credit of these pacific arbitrators, who, upon the whole, made up but a moties and ill-composed society, weakened by intestine discords. It required more dexterity, and greater efforts of genius, to oppose the progress, and disconcert the sophistry of a set of men who had invented new methods of defending Popery, and attacking its adverfaries. This new fpecies of polemic doctors were called Methodifts, and the most eminent of them arose in France, where a perpetual scene of controversy, carried on with the most learned among the Huguenots, had augmented the dexterity, and improved the theological talents, of the Roman Catholic disputants. The Methodilts, from their different manner of treating the controverly in question, may be divided into two classes. In the one we may place those doctors whose method of disputing with the Protestants was difingenuous and unreasonable, and who followed the examples of those military chiefs, who shut up their troops in intrenchments and strong holds, in order to cover them from the attacks of the enemy. Such was the manner of proceeding of the Jefuit VERON, who was of opinion, that the Protestants should be obliged to prove the tenets of their church [b] by plain paf-

[[]b] More especially the doctrines that peculiarly oppose the decrees and tenets of the council of Trent.

CENT. fages of feripture, without being allowed the li-SECT. II. berty of illustrating these passages, reasoning upon PART I. them, or drawing any conclusions from them $\lceil c \rceil$. In the fame class may be ranked Nihusius, an apostate from the Protestant religion $\lceil d \rceil$, the two WALENBURGS, and other Polemics, who, looking upon it as an eafier matter to maintain their pretenfions than to they upon what principles they were originally founded [6], obliged their adverfaries to prove all their affertions and objections, whether of an affirmative or negative kind, and confined themselves to the eager business of anfwering objections and repelling attacks. We may also place among this kind of Methodists Cardinal RICHELIEU, who judged it the shortest and best way to attend little to the multitude of accufations, objections, and reproaches, with which the Protestants loaded all the various branches of the Romish government, discipline, doctrine, and worship, and to confine the whole controverly to the fingle article of the divine inftitution and authority of the Church, which he thought it effential to establish by the strongest

> [c] Muszus, De Ufu Principiorum Rationis in Controversiis Theologicis, lib. i. c. iv. p. 22 .- G. CALIXTI Digressio de Arte

> nova, p. 125.—Simox, Lettres Choiftes, tom. i. p. 276. [d] See a particular account of this vain and fuperficial doctor in BAYLE's Dictionary, at the article Nihusius. His work, entitled, Ars Nova dielo Sacra Scriptura unico lucrandi a Pontificiis plurimos in partes Lutheranorum detecta, &c. was refuted, in the most satisfactory manner, by CALIXTUS, in his Digressio in Arte Nova contra Nihusium, a curious and learned work, which was published * in 4to at Helmstadt, in 1634.

> [e] That is to fay, in other words, that they pleaded prescription in favour of Popery, and acted like one who having been, for a long time, in possession of an edute, refuses to produce his title, and requires that those who question it should prove its infufficiency or falfehood.

^{*} This piece originally made a part of the Theologia Moralis of CALIXTUS, but was afterwards published separately.

arguments, as the grand principle that would ren- c E N T.

der Popery impregnable [f].

SECT. II.

The Methodists of the second class were of opi- PART I. nion, that the most expedient manner of reducing the Protestants to filence was not to attack them by piecemeal, but to overwhelm them at once, by the weight of some general principle or prefumption, fome universal argument, which comprehended, or might be applied to, all the points contested between the two churches. They imitated the conduct of those military leaders who, instead of spending their time and strength in sieges and skirmishes, endeavour to put an end to the war by a general and decifive action. This method, if not invented [g], was at least improved and seconded by all the aids of eloquence and genius, by Nicolle, a celebrated doctor among the Janfenists [b]; and it was followed by many of the disputants

[f] For a more ample account of these methods of controverfy, and of others used by the Church of Rome, the curious reader may confult FRID. SPANHEIM, Strictur. ad Expositionem Fidei Boffieti, tom. iii. opp. par. II. p. 1037.—Jo. HENR. Heidegger, Hiftor. Papalus, Period. vii. § ccxviii. p. 316.— WALCHII Introduct. ad Controvers. Theolog, tom. ii, -WEIS-MANNI Hiftor. Ecclefiaflica, Sec. xvii. p. 726.

[g] This method certainly was not the invention of NICOLLE, for it feems to differ little, if at all, from the method of Cardinal RICHELIEU. We may observe further, that RICHELIEU feems rather to belong to the fecond class of Methodifts than to the first, where Dr. Mosheim has placed him.

[b] Nicolle is supposed to be the author of a book, entitled, Préjugés legitimes contre les Calvinistes, which was first published at Paris in 1671, passed afterwards thro' several editions, and was answered in a satisfactory manner by several learned men. It is very remarkable, that fome of the principal arguments employed in this book against the Protestants are precifely the same that the Deists make use of to shew, that it is impossible for the general body of Christians to believe upon a rational foundation. The learned CLAUDE, in his Defence of the Reformation, shewed, in a demonstrative manner, that the difficulties arifing from the incapacity of the multitude to exaSecr. II. PART I.

CENT. disputants of the church of Rome, who were fo fully perfunded of its irrefiftible influence, that they looked upon any one of the general points already mentioned as fufficient, when properly handled, to overturn the whole Protestant cause. Hence it was, that some of these Polemics rested the defence of Popery upon the fingle principle of prefcription; others upon the vicious lives of feveral of those princes who had withdrawn their dominions from the yoke of Rome; others again, upon the criminal nature of religious fehifm, with which they reproached the promoters of the Reformation; and they were all convinced, that, by urging their respective arguments, and making good their respective charges, the mouths of their adversaries must be stopped, and the cause of Rome and its pontif triumph [i]. The fumous Bossuer food foremoit in this class, which he peculiarly adorned, by the fuperiority of his genius and the infinuating charms of his eloquence. His arguments, indeed, were more specious than folid, and the circumstances from which they were drawn were imprudently chosen. From the variety of opinions that take place among the Protestant doctors, and the changes that have happened in their discipline and doctrine, he endeavoured to demonstrate, that the church founded by LUTHER was not the true church; and, on the other hand, from the perpetual fameness and uni-

> mine the grounds and principles of the Protestant religion, are much less than those which occur to a Papist, whose faith is founded, not on the plain word of God alone, but on the dielates of tradition, on the decrees of councils, and a variety of antiquated records that are beyond his reach. The Proteflant divine goes still further, and proves, that there are arguments in favour of Christianity and the Protestant faith, that are intelligible by the lowest capacity, and, at the same time, fufficient to fatisfy an upright and unprejudiced mind.

> [i] FRID. SPANHEMII Diff. de Proferiptione in Rebus Fid.i adverfus novos Mechodifus, tom. iii. par. II. opp. p. 1079.

formity that reign in the tenets and worship of CENT. the church of Rome, he pretended to prove its di- SECT. II. vine original [k]. Such an argument must in- PART I. deed furprile, coming from a man of learning, who could not be ignorant of the temporifing spirit of the Roman pontifs, nor of the changes they had permitted in their discipline and doctrine, according to the genius of time and place, and the different characters of those whom they were defirous to gain over to their interests. It was still more furprising in a French prelate, fince the doctors of that nation generally maintain, that the leaden age does not differ more from the age of gold, than the modern church of Rome differs from the ancient and primitive church of that famous city.

[k] This is the purpose of Bossuer's Histoire des Variations des Eglises Protestantes, which was published in 8vo at Paris, in the year 1688, and is still confidered by the Roman Catholics as one of the strongest bulwarks of popery. Let them go on in their illutions, and boast of this famous champion and desender; but if they have any true zeal for the cause he defends, or any regard for the authority of the supreme head of their church, they will bury in oblivion that maxim of this their champion, that the church, which to frequently modifies, varies, and changes its doctrines, is deflitute of the direction of the Holy Spirit. numberless instances of variations in the doctrine and worship of Rome, that must strike every one who has any tolerable acquaintance with the history of that church. But, without going any farther than one fingle inflance, we may observe, that Bossuer had a striking proof of the variations of his own church, in the different reception that his Emposition of the Roman Catholie faith met with from different persons, and at different times. It was disapproved of by one Pope, approved of by another; it was applauded by the Archbithop of Rheims, and condemned by the University of Lour ain; it was censured by the Sorbonne in the year 1671, and declared by the same society a true exposition of the Catholic faith in the following century. For a full proof of the truth of these and other variations, see WAKE's Exposition, &c .- LE CLERC, Bibl. Univ. tom. xi. p. 438, &c. -General Dictionary, at the article WAKF, in the note, and Piblioth. des Sciences, &c. tom. xviii. p. 29, &c.

CENT.
XVII.
SECT. II.
PART I.
Deferters from the Protestant to the Romiss
Church.

XVI. These various attempts of the votaries of Rome, though they gave abundant exercise to the activity and vigilance of the Protestant doctors, were not, however, attended with any important revolutions, or any confiderable fruits. Some princes, indeed, and a few learned men, were thereby feduced into the communion of that church, from whose superstition and tyranny their ancestors had delivered themselves and others; but these defections were only personal, nor was there any people or province either inclined or engaged to follow these examples. Among the more illustrious descriters of the Protestant religion, were Christina queen of Sweden [!], a princess of great spirit and genius, but precipitate and vehement in almost all her proceedings, and preferring her eafe, pleasure and liberty, to all other confiderations [m]; Wolfang William, count Palatine of the Rhine; CHRISTIAN WIL-LIAM, marquis of Brandenburg; ERNEST, prince

[1] See Arkenhout, Memoires de la Reine Christine, which contain a variety of agreeable and interefling anecdotes.

[m] The candid and impartial writer, mentioned in the preceding note, has given an ample account of the circumstances that attended this queen's change of religion, and of the causes that might have contributed to determine her to a flep fo unexpected and inexcufable. It was neither the fubtilty of DES CARTES, nor the desterity of CANUT, that brought about this event, as BAILLET would perfuade us. The true flate of the case seems to have been this: Christina, having had her sentiments of religion in general confiderably perverted by the licentious infinuations of her favourite Bourdelor, was, by that means, prepared for embracing any particular religion that pleafure, interest, or ambition, should recommend to her. Upon this foundation, the Jesuits MACEDO, MALINES, and Cassati, under the immediate protection of Pimentel, and encouraged by the courts of Rome, Spain, and Portugal, employed their labours and dexterity in the conversion of this princels, whose passion for Italy, together with that taste for the fine arts, and the precious remains of antiquity, that made her defirous of fojourning there, may have contributed not a little to make her embrace the religion of that country.

of Heffe [n]; John Frederick, duke of Brunf- CENT. wick; and FREDERICK Augustus, king of Po- SECT. IL. land.

The learned men that embraced the communion of the church of Rome were, Baron Boine-BURG, fecretary to the elector of Mentz, and an eminent patron of erudition and genius [0], CHRISTOPHER RANZOW, a knight of Holftein [p], CASPER SCIOPPIUS, PETRUS BERTIUS, CHRISTO-PHER BESOLD, ULRIC HUNNIUS, NICHOLAS STENON, a Danish physician, of great reputation in his profession, John Philip Preiffer, professor at Konig sburg, Lucas Holstenius, Petrus LAMBECHIUS, HENRY BLUMIUS, professor at Helmftadt, a man of learning, and of excessive vanity [q], Daniel Nesselius, Andrew Frommius, [n] This learned and well-meaning prince was engaged, by the conversation and importunities of VALERIUS MAG-NUS, a celebrated monk of the Capuchin Order, to embrace Popery, in the year 1651. See GRUBERI Commercium Epifloi. Leibnitianum, tom. i. p. 27. 35. Memoires de la Reine Chris-Tine, tom. 1. p. 216.—It is, however, to be observed, that this prince, together with Anthony Ulric, Duke of Brunfwick, and several others, who went over to the Church of Rome, did not go ever to that Church of Rome which is now exhibited to us in the odious forms of superflicion and tyranny, but to another kind of church, which, perhaps, never existed but in their idea, and which, at least, has long ceased to exist. That this was the cafe appears evidently from the theological writings of Prince Ernest.

[0] This eminent man, who had more learning than philofophy, and who was more remarkable for the extent of his memory than for the rectitude of his judgment, followed the example of the Prince of Helle, in the year 1653. See GRU-BERI Commercium Epistol. Libritianum, in which his Letters, and those of Congingrus are published, tom. i. p. 35. 37.

39. 48. 56. 60. 70, 76. 92, &c.

[p] See Mollen Cimbria Literata, tom. i. p. 520.

[q] Blumius deferred from the Protestant Church in the year 1654 .- See Burckardi Historia Biblioth. Augusta, par. III. p. 223. 233.—GRUBERI Commercium Epiftol. Leibnitianum, tom. i. p. 41. 95. 135. 137. 379. 388. 410. In these letters he is called Florus, probably in allusion to his German name Blum, which figuifies a flower.

BARTHOLD

XVII. SECT. II. PART L.

CINT. BARTHOLD NIHUSIUS, CHRISTOPHER HELLWI-GIUS, MATTHEW PRÆTORIUS, and a few others of inferior rank in the learned world. But thefe conversions, when considered with the motives that produced them, will be found, in reality, less honourable to the church of Rome than they are in appearance; for if in the lift of princes and learned men above mentioned, we efface those whom the temptations of advertity, the impulse of avarice and ambition, the fuggestions of levity, the effects of personal attachments, the power of fuperstition upon a feeble and irresolute mind, and other motives of like merit, engaged to embrace the Romish religion, these profelytes will be reduced to a number too finall to excite the envy of the Protestant churches [r].

The Romish church-interest loses ground in the East.

XVII. The Christian churches in the East, which were independent on the yoke of Rome, did not stand less firm and stedfast against the attempts of the papal missionaries than those of Europe. The pompous accounts which feveral Roman-catholic writers have given of the wonderful fuccess of these missionaries among the Nestorians and Monophysites, are little else than fplendid fables, defigned to amuse and dazzle the multitude; and many of the wifest and best of the Roman-catholic doctors acknowledge, that they ought to be confidered in no other light. As little credit is to be given to those who mention the strong propensity discovered by several of the heads and superintendants of the Christian fects in these remote regions, to submit to the jurisdiction of the Roman pontif [s]. It is evident,

[s] See the remarks made by CHARDIN in feveral places of the last edition of his travels. See also what URBAN CERRI, in

[[]r] See for a particular account of these profelytes to Popery, Weisman's Historia Eccles. Sec. xvii. p. 738 .- Walikius's Introductio in Controversias, tom. ii. p. 728.—Arrold's Kirchen und Ketzer Historie, par. p. 912. and other writers of civil and literary hillory,

PART I.

the contrary, that Rome, in two remarkable in- CENT. stances, fuffered a considerable diminution of its SECTEIL influence and authority in the eaftern world during this century. One of these instances was the dreadful revolution in Japan, which has been already related, and which was unhappily followed by the total extinction of Christianity in that great monarchy. The other was the downfal of Popery by the extirpation of its missionaries in the empire of Abyffinia, of which it will not be improper, or foreign from our purpose, to give here a brief account.

About the commencement of the feventeenth century, the Portuguese Jesuits renewed, under the most auspicious encouragement, the mission to Abyffinia that had been, for fome time before that period, interrupted and fufpended. For the Emperor Susnerus, who affumed the denomination of Seltam Segued, after the defeat of his enemies and his accession to the crown, covered the missionaries with his peculiar protection. Gained over to their cause, partly by the eloquence of the Jesuits, and partly by the hopes of maintaining himfelf upon the throne by the fuccours of the Portuguese, he committed the whole government of the church to Alfhonso Mendez, a missionary from that nation; created him patriarch of the Abyffinians; and not only fwore, in a public manner, allegiance to the Roman pontif in the year 1626, but moreover obliged his fubjects to abandon the religious rites and tenets of their ancestors, and to embrace the doctrine his Prefent State of the Church of Rome, fays of the Armenians and Copies .- It is true indeed, that among these sees the Papal mitfionaries fornetime, form congregations that are obedient to the fee of Rose; but these congregations are poor and inconfiderable, and composed only of a handful of members. Thus the Capuchine, about the middle of the century now under confideration, founded a small congregation among the Monophy-fixes of Ma, whose bishop resides at Alego. See Lieousen, Oricas Ch. ifrianus, tom. ii. p. 1408.

22

and

CENT. and worship of the Romish church. But the new SECT. II. patriarch ruined, by his intemperate zeal, impru-PART I. dence, and arrogance, the cause in which he had embarked, and occasioned the total subversion of the Roman pontif's authority and jurisdiction, which had really been established upon folid foundations. For he began his ministry with the most inconfiderate acts of violence and despotism. Following the spirit of the Spanish inquisition, he employed formidable threatnings and cruel tortures to convert the Abyffinians; the greatest part of whom, together with their priefts and ministers, held the religion of their ancestors in the highest veneration, and were willing to part with their lives and fortunes rather than forfake it. He alfo ordered those to be rebaptized, who, in compliance with the orders of the emperor, had embraced the faith of Rome, as if their former religion had been nothing more than a fystem of Paganism [t]. This the Abyssinian clergy looked upon as a shocking insult upon the religious discipline of their ancestors, as even more provoking than the violence and barbarities practifed against those who refused to submit to the papal yoke. Nor did the infolent patriarch rest fatis-fied with these arbitrary and despotic proceedings

^[1] The reader will recoilect, that the Abyfinians differ but very little from the Copts in Egypt, and acknowledge the patriarch of ALEXANDRIA as their fpiritual chief. They receive the Old and New Testament, the three first Councils, the Nicene Creed, and the Apostolical Constitutions. Their first conversion to Christianity is attributed by some to the samous prime minister of their Queen Candace, mentioned in the Ass of the Apostolic; it is however probable, that the general conversion of that great empire was not perfected before the fourth century, when Frumentius, ordained Bishop of Armama by Athanasius, exercised his ministry among them with the most altonishing success. They were esteemed a pure church before they fell into the errors of Eutyches and Dioscorus; and even since that period they are still a purer church than that of Rome.

in the church; he excited tumults and factions c ENT. in the state, and, with an unparalleled spirit of re- XVII. bellion and arrogance, encroached upon the pre- PART I. rogatives of the throne, and attempted to give law to the emperor himself. Hence arose civil commotions, conspiracies, and feditions, which excited in a little time the indignation of the emperor, and the hatred of the reople against the Jefuits, and produced at length, in the year 1631, a public declaration from the throne, by which the Abyffinian monarch annulled the orders he had formerly given in favour of popery, and left his fubjects at liberty, either to perfevere in the doctrine of their ancestors, or to embrace the faith of Rome. This rational declaration was mild and indulgent towards the Jesuits, considering the treatment their infolence and prefumption had fo justly deferved; but in the following reign much feverer meafures were employed against them. BASILIDES, the fon of SEGUED, who fucceeded his father in the year 1632, no fooner ascended the throne, than he thought it expedient to rid his dominions of these troublefome and despotic guests; and accordingly, in the year 1634, he banished from the territories of Ethiopia the Patriarch MENDEZ, with all the Jefuits and Europeans that belonged to his retinue, and treated the Roman-catholic missionaries with excessive rigour and feverity $\lceil u \rceil$. From this pe-

[[]u] See Ludolfi History of Ethiopica, lib. iii. cap. xii.—Geddes's Church History of Ethiopica, p. 233.—La Croze, Historie du Christianisme de l'Ethiopic, p. 79.—Lobo, Voyage d'Abyssime, p. 116. 130. 144. with the additions of Le Grand, p. 173. and the fourth Dissertation that is subjoined to the second volume. In this differtation LE GRAND, himfelf a Roman Catholic, makes the following remark upon the conduct of the l'atriarch MENDEZ: "It were to be wished, says he, " that the patriarch had never intermeddled in fuch a variety " of affairs," (by which mitigated expression the author means

CENT. riod the very name of Rome, its religion, and its XVII.

PART I. pontif, were objects of the highest aversion among the Abyssinians, who guarded their frontiers with the greatest vigilance and the strictest attention, lest any Jesuit or Romish missionary should steal into their territories in disguise, and excite new tumults and commotions in the kingdom. The Roman pontifs indeed made more than one attempt to recover the authority they had lost by the ill success and misconduct of the Jesuits. They began by sending two Capuchin monks to repair their loss; but these unfortunate wretches his ambitious attempts to govern in the cabinet as well as in the clurch), "non carried his authority to fuch a height, as to be have in Ethiopia as if he had been in a country where the inquifition was established: for, by this conduct, he fet all the people against him, and excited in them such an aversion to the Roman Casholies in general, and to the Jesuits in particular, as nothing has been hitherto able to diminish, and which subsides in its full force to this day." The third book of LA CROZE'S History, which relates to the property and ruin of this mission, is translated by Mr. LOCKMAN had been subsided in the Travels of the Jesuits, vol. i. 308, Sec. as also is Poncer's Voyage, mentioned in the following note.

were no fooner discovered than they were stoned to death. They afterwards employed more artful and clandeshine methods of reviving the missions, and had recourse to the influence and intercession of Lewis XIV., king of France, to procure admission for their emissaries into the Abysfinian empire [70]; but, as far as we have learnt,

[w] There projects are mentioned by Cerri, in his Eist prefent de l' Eglife Romaine, p. 217.—Le Grand, in his Supplement to Lobo's Imerarium Ethiopicum, tom. i. p. 181 *.—

^{*} Father Lobo, who resided nine years in Ethipha, has given an elegant and lively, though simple and succinct description, or that wast empire, in his Itinerarium Æbiopicum. This itinerary was translated into French by M. Le Grand, and cariched by him with several curious anecdotes and differtations. Hence Dr. Moshelm sometimes quotes the stinerarium under the title of Voyage d'Abistine, reserving to Le Grand's French translation of it.

PART L.

these attempts have hitherto proved unsuccessful, CENT. nor have the pontifs or their votaries been as yet SECT. II. able to calm the refentment of that exasperated nation, or to conquer its reluctance against the worship and jurisdiction of the church of Rome [x]. XVIII. Hitherto

The reader who would know what credit is to be given to what the Jefuits fay of the attachment and veneration which the Afiatic and African Christians express for the Church of Rome, will do well to compare the relations of LE GRAND, who was a Roman Catholic, and no enemy to the Jefuits, and who drew his relations from the most authentic records, with those of Poncer, a French physician, who went into Ethiopia in the year 1698, accompanied by Father BREDEVENT, a Jefuit, who died during the voyage. This comparison will convince every ingenuous and impartial inquirer, that the accounts of the Jesuits are not to be trusted to, and that they furpals ancient Carthage itself in the art of deceiving. Pon-CET's Voyage is published in the fourth volume of the Jesuitical work, entitled, Lettres Curieuses et Edificates des Missions

Etrangeres.

[x] LAFITAU and REBOULET, who have composed each a Life of Pope CLEMENT XI., tell us, that the Emperor of Abyfinia defired the Roman pontif, in the year 1703, to fend to his court mislionaries and legates to instruct him and his people, and to receive their submission to the see of Rome. These biographers go still further, and affert, that this monarch actually embraced the communion of Rome in the year 1712. But thefe affertions are idle fictions, forged by the Jesuits and their creatures. It is well known, on the contrary, that fo lately as a very few years ago, the edict prohibiting all Europeans to enter into Ethiopia was still in force, and was executed with the greatest feverity. Even the Turks are included in this prchibition; and, what is still more remarkable, the Egyptian Monophyfites, who have once entered within the Abyfilmian territories, are not allowed to return into their own country. All these sacts are confirmed by a modern writer of the most unquestionable authority, the learned and worthy M. MAIL-LET, the French conful-general in Egypi, and ambaffador from Lewis XIV. to the Emperor of Abyfinia, in his Description de P Egypte, par. I. p. 325. which was published at Paris in 410, in the year 1735. See also LE GRAND's Supplement to LOBO's Itinerarium, which was published in the year 1728. This last mentioned author, after relating all the attempts that have been made in our times, by the French nation and the Roman pontils, to introduce Romith priefls into Aboffmia, adds, that all fuch attempts must appear vain and chimerical to all those

C E N T. XVII. SECT. II. PART I. The papal authority lofes ground.

XVIII. Hitherto we have confined our views to the external state and condition of the church of Rome, and to the good or ill fuccess that attended its endeavours to extend its dominion in the different parts of the world. It will be now proper to change the scene, to consider this church in its internal constitution, and to pass in review its polity, discipline, institutions, and doctrine. Its ancient form of government still remained; but its pontifs and bishops loft, in many places, no finall part of that extensive authority they had fo long enjoyed. The halcyon days were now over, in which the papal clergy excited with impunity feditious tumults in the state, intermeddled openly in the transactions of government, struck terror into the hearts of sovereigns and fubjects by the thunder of their anathemas, and, imposing burthensome contributions on the credulous multitude, filled their coffers by notorious acts of tyranny and oppression. The pope himfelf, though still honoured with the fame pompous titles and denominations, found nevertheless frequently, by a mortifying and painful experience, that these titles had lost a considerable part of their former fignification, and that the energy of these denominations diminished from day to day. For now almost all the princes and states of Europe had adopted that important maxim that had been formerly peculiar to the French nation: That the power of the Roman pontif is entirely confined to matter's of a religious and spiritual nature, and cannot, under any pretext whatfoever, extend to civil transactions or worldly affairs. In who have any knowledge of the empire of Abyffinia, and of the fpirit and character of its inhabitants; his words are: Toutes ces enterprifes paroitront chimeriques à ceux qui connoitront P Abiffinie et les Abiffinis. It is highly probable, that the new mission which is preparing at Rome for the empire of Abyffinia, will prove a new instance of the solidity of M. Le Crand's reflexion.

the schools, indeed, and colleges of Roman-ca- c E N T. tholic countries, and in the writings of the Ro- XVII. mish priests and doctors, the majesty of the pope PART I. was still exalted in the most emphatic terms, and his prerogatives displayed with all imaginable pomp. The Jesuits also, who have been always ambitious of a diffinguished place among the affertors of the power and pre-eminence of the Roman fee, and who give themselves out for the pope's most obfequious creatures, raifed their voices, in this ignoble cause, even above those of the schools and colleges. Nay, even in the courts of fovereign princes, very flattering terms and high-founding phrases were sometimes used, to express the dignity and authority of the head of the church. But as it happens in other cases, that men's actions are frequently very different from their language, fo was this observation particularly verified in the case of Rome's Holy Father. He was extolled in words, by those who despised him most in reality; and when any dispute arose between him and the princes of his communion, the latter respected his authority no further than they found expedient for their own purposes, and measured the extent of his prerogatives and jurifdiction, not by the flavish adulation of the colleges and the Jefuits, but by a regard to their own interests and independence.

XIX. This the Roman pontifs learned, by a The rup-difagreeable experience, as often as they endea-tween Paul voured, during this century, to refume their for-Vand the Venctians. mer pretenfions, to interpose their authority in civil affairs, and encroach upon the jurisdiction of fovereign states. The conduct of PAUL V., and the consequences that followed it, furnish a striking example that abundantly verifies this observation. This haughty and arrogant pontif laid the Republic of Venice under an Interdict in the year 1606. The reasons alleged for this insofent proceeding, were the profecution of two ec-. Vol. V. clefiaftics

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART I. clefiaftics for capital crimes; as also two wife edicts, one of which prohibited the erection of any more religious edifices in the Venetian territories, without the knowledge and confent of the fenate; and the other the alienation of any lay possessions or estates in favour of the clergy, without the express approbation of the Republic. The Venetian fenate received this papal infult with dignity, and conducted themselves under it with becoming refolution and fortitude. Their first step was to prevent their clergy from executing the Interdict, by an act prohibiting that ceffation of public worship, and that suspension of the facraments, which the pope had commanded in this imperious mandate. Their next step was equally vigorous; for they banished from their territories the Jesuits and Capuchin friars, who obeyed the orders of the pope, in opposition to their express commands. In the process of this controverfy they employed their ablest pens, and particularly that of the learned and ingenious PAUL SARPI, of the Order of Servites, to demonstrate, on the one hand, the justice of their cause, and to determine, on the other, after an accurate and impartial enquiry, the true limits of the Roman pontif's jurifdiction and authority. arguments of these writers were so strong and urgent, that BARONIUS, and the other learned advocates whom the pope had employed in fupporting his pretentions and defending his meafurcs, struggled in vain against their irresistible evidence. In the mean time all things tended towards a rupture, and PAUL V. was gathering together his forces in order to make war upon the Venetians, when HENRY IV., king of France, interposed as mediator [y], and concluded a peace

^[7] It must be observed here, that it was at the request of the pope, and not of the Venetians, that HENRY IV. interposed as mediator. The Venetians had nothing to fear.

Their

tween the contending parties, on conditions not CENT. very honourable to the ambitious pontif [z]. For SECT. II. the Venetians could not be perfuaded to repeal PART I. the edicts and refolutions they had issued out against the court of Rome upon this occasion, nor to recal the Jefuits from their exile [a].—It is

Their cause was confidered as the common cause of all the fovereign states of Italy; and the dukes of Urbino, Blodena, and Savoy, had already offered their troops and fervices to the Republic. But the raft pontif, perceiving the florin that was gathering against him, took refuge in the F. ench monarch's interceffion.

[2] Besides DE THOU and other historians, see DANIEL. Histoire de le France, tom. x. p. 385.—Heidegger's Historia Papatas, Period. vii. § ccxx. p. 322.-Jo. WOLFG. JALGERS Hiftoria Ecclef. Sarc. xvii. Decenn. i. p. 108 .- More especially the writings of the famous PAUL SARPI, commonly called FRA-PAOLO, and of the other divines and canonifts that defended the cause of the Republic, deserve a coreful and attentive perulal. For these writings were composed with such folidity, learning, and eloquence, that they produced remarkable effects, and contributed much to open the eyes of feveral princes and magistrates; and to prevent their submitting blindly and implicitly, as their ancestors had done, to the imperious dictates of the Roman pontifs. Among the most mafterly pieces written in this cause, we must place FRA-PAOLO'S Istoria delle cose passate entre PAUL V., et la Republ. di Venetia, published in sto at Mirandola, in the year 1621; and his Historia Interdicti Feneti, which was published in 4to at Cambridge, in the year 1626, by bishop Bedelle, who, during thefe troubles, had been chaplain to the English ambassador at Venice. PAUL V., by forcing the Venetians to publish to the world, in these admirable productions, his arrogance and temerity on the one hand, and many truths unfavourable to the pretentions of the popes on the other, was the occasion of the greatest perplexities and oppositions that the court of Rom: had to encounter in after-times.

[a] When the peace was made between the Venetians and the pope, in the year 1607, the Capuchins and the other ecclefiaftics, that had been banished on account of their partiality to the cause of Rome, were all re-instated in their respective functions, except the Jesuits. These latter, however, were recalled in the year 1657, under the pontificate of ALFXAN-DER VII., in confequence of the earnest and importunate requests of Lewis XIV., king of France, and several other remarkable, that, at the time of this rupture, the fenate of Venice entertained ferious thoughts of a total feparation from the church of Rome, in which the ambaffadors of England and Holland did all that was in their power to confirm them. But many confiderations of a momentous nature intervened to prevent the execution of this defign, which, as it would feem, had not the approbation of the fagacious and prudent Fra-Paolo, notwithstanding his aversion to the tyranny and maxims of the court of Rome [b].

L 2

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PARTI.

princes, who gave the Venetians no rest until they re-admitted these dangerous guests into their territories. It is, neverthelefs, to be observed, that the Jesuits never recovered the credit and influence they had formerly enjoyed in that Republie, nor, at this present time, is there any people of the Romish communion, among whom their fociety has lefs power than among the Venetians, who have never yet forgot their rebellious behaviour during the quarrel now mentioned. See the Voyage Historique en Italie, Allemagne, Suiffe (published at Am-Herdan in 8vo in the year 1736), tom. i. p. 291. It is further worthy of observation, that, fince this famous quarrel between the Republic of Venice and the court of Rome, the bulls and reseripts of the popes have just as much authority in that Republic, as its fenate judges confiftent with the rules of wife policy, and the true interests and welfare of the community. For proof of this, we need go no further than the respectable tellimony of Cardinal HENRY NORIS, who, in the year 1676, wrote to Magliabecchi in the following terms: Poche Bulle pessevano quelle acque verso, la parte del Adriatico, per le massime ligitate nel Testamento di FRA-PAOLO: i.e. Few papal Bulls pais the Pe, or approach the coasts of the Adriatic Sea; the maxims bequeathed to the Venetians by FRA-PAOLO render this passage entremely difficult.

[b] This delign of the Venetians is particularly mentioned by Burner, in his Life of Billiop Budget, and by La Cougarden, in his Definite de la Nouvelle Treduction de l'Histoire du Concile de Trente (published in 8vo at Amplerdam in the year 1742) p. 35. This latter writer shews plainly, that Franchoo, though his fentiments differed in many points from the doctrine of the church of Rome, yet did not approve of all the renets received by the Proteflants, nor suggest to the Venetians the delign of renouncing the Romish faith.

XX. Had the Portuguese acted with the same CENT. wisdom and resolution that distinguished the Vescett. II. netians, their contest with the court of Rome, PART I. which begun under the pontificate of URBAN The contest VIII., in the year 1641, and was carried on un-between the Roman a manner equally difadvantageous to the haughty pretensions of the Roman pontifs. The Portuguefe, unable to bear any longer the tyranny and oppression of the Spanish government, threw off the yoke, and chose Don John duke of Braganza, for their king. URBAN VIII., and his fucceffors in the fee of Rome, obstinately refused, notwithflanding the most earnest and pressing solicitations both of the French and Portuguese, either to acknowledge Don John's title to the crown, or to confirm the bishops whom this prince had named to fill the vacant fees in Portugal. Hence it happened, that the greatest part of the kingdom remained for a long time without bishops. pretended vicar of Christ upon earth, whose character ought to fet him above the fear of man, was fo flavishly apprehensive of the resentment of the king of Spain, that, rather than offend that monarch, he violated the most folemn obligations of his station, by leaving such a number of churches without pastors and spiritual guides. The French, and other European courts, advised and exhorted the new king of Portugal to follow the noble example of the Venetians, and to affemble a national council, by which the new created bishops might be confirmed, in spite of the pope, in their respective sees. Don John seemed difposed to listen to their councils, and to act with resolution and vigour at this important crisis; but his enterprifing spirit was checked by the formidable power of the inquifition, the incredible fuperfittion of the people, and the blind zeal and attachment that the nation, in general, discovered

PART 1.

CFNT for the person and authority of the Roman pontif. SECT. H. Hence the popes continued their insults with impunity; and it was not before the peace concluded between Portugal and Spain, five-and-twenty years after this revolution, that the bishops nominated by the king were confirmed by the pope. It was under the pontificate of CLEMENT IX. that an accommodation was brought about between the courts of Portugal and Rome. It must, indeed, be observed, to the honour of the Portuguefe, that, notwithstanding their superstitious attachment to the court of Rome, they vigorously opposed its ambitious pontif in all his attempts to draw from this contest an augmentation of his power and authority in that kingdom; nor did the bishops permit, in their respective sees, any encroachment to be made, at this time, upon the privileges and rights enjoyed by their monarchs in former ages $\lceil \epsilon \rceil$.

The conteffs between the French nation and the Roman pontits.

XXI. There had fubfifted, during many preceding ages, an almost uninterrupted minntelligence between the French monarchs and the Roman pontifs, which had often occasioned an open rupture, and which produced more than once that violent effect during this century. The greatest exertions of industry, artifice, and assiduous labour were employed by the popes, during the whole of this period, to conquer the aversion that the French had conceived against the pretentions and authority of the court of Rome, and to undermine imperceptibly, and enervate and destroy by degrees, the liberties of the ^[1] See Geddes's Hiftory of the Pepe's laboration towards Portigal, from 1641 to 1666, in his Mijellaneous Trass, tom. ii. p. 75-186.-The cause of the Portuguese, in this quarrel, is defended with great learning and fagacity by a French writer, whose name was Bullian, in a book emided, Pro Ecelofis Lufuanis ad Cierum Gallizanum Litelii Das.

Gallican church. In this arduous and important C ENT. enterprise the Jesuits acted a principal part, and SECT. II. feconded, with all their dexterity and craft, the PART I. defigns of the aspiring pontifs. But these attempts and stratagems were effectually defeated and disconcerted by the parliament of Paris; while many able pens expofed the tyranny and injustice of the papal claims, RICHER, LAUNOY, PETRUS DE MARCA, NATALIS ALEXANDER, EL-LIS DU PIN, and others, displayed their learning and talents in this contest, though with different degrees of merit. They appealed to the ancient decrees of the Gallican church, which they confirmed by recent authorities, and enforced by new and victorious arguments. It will naturally be thought, that there bold and respectable defenders of the rights and liberties both of church and state were amply rewarded, for their generous labours, by peculiar marks of the approbation and protection of the court of France. But this was fo far from being always the cafe, that they received, on the contrary, from time to time, feveral marks of its refentment and displeafure, defigned to appeale the rage and indignation of the threatening pontif, whom it was thought expedient to treat fometimes with artifice and caution. Rome, however, gained but little by this mild policy of the French court. For it has been always a prevailing maxim with the monarchs of that nation, that their prerogatives and pretentions are to be defended against the encroachments of the Roman pontifs with as little noise and contention as possible; and that pompous memorials, and warm and vehement remonstrances, are to be carefully avoided, except in cases of urgent necessity $\lceil d \rceil$. Nor do these princes

L 4

[[]d] It is with a view to this, that VOLTAIRE, fpeaking of the manner in which the court of France maintains its prerogatives against the Roman pontif, says, pleasantly, that the King of France kiffes the Pope's feet, and ties up his hands.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

princes think it beneath their dignity to yield, more or less, to time and occasion, and even to pretend a mighty veneration for the orders and authority of the pontifs, in order to obtain from them, by fair means, the immunities and privileges which they look upon as their due. But they are, nevertheless, constantly on their guard; and, as foon as they perceive the court of Rome taking advantage of their lenity to extend its dominion, and the lordly popes growing infolent in confequence of their mildness and submission, they then alter their tone, change their measures, and refume the language that becomes the monarchs of a nation, that could never bear the tyranny and oppression of the papal yoke. All this appears evidently in the contests that arose between the courts of France and Rome, under the reign Lewis XIV., of which it will not be improper to give here some interesting instances $\lceil e \rceil$.

And more especially those of Lewis XIV.

XXII. The first of these contests happened under the pontificate of ALEXANDER VII., and was owing to the temerity and insolence of his Corsican guards, who, in the year 1662, insulted the French ambassador and his lady, the duke and dutchess of Creour, at the instigation, as it is supposed, of the pope's nephews. Lewis demanded satisfaction for this insult offered to his representative; and, on the pope's delaying to answer this demand, actually ordered his troops to file off for Italy, and to besiege the arrogant pontif in his capital. The latter, terrified by these warlike preparations, implored the clemen- c E & T. cy of the incented monarch, who granted his pardon and absolution to the humble pontif, and PARTL concluded a peace with him at Pifa, in the year 1664, upon the most inglorious and mortifying conditions. These conditions were, that the pope should fend his nephew to Paris, in the character of a suppliant for pardon; that he should brand the Corfican guards with perpetual infamy, and break them by a public edict; and should erect a pyramid at Rome, with an infcription deftined to preferve the memory of this audacious instance of papal insolence, and of the exemplary manner in which it was chastised and humbled by the French monarch. It is however to be obferved, that in this contest Lewis did not chastise ALEXANDER, confidered in his ghoftly character as head of the church; but as a temporal prince, violating the law of nations $\lceil f \rceil$. He however fhewed, on other occasions, that, when properly provoked, he was as much disposed to humble papal as princely ambition, and that he feared the bead of the church as little as the temporal ruler of the ecclefiastical state. This appeared evidently by the important and warm debate he had with INNOCENT XI., confidered in his fpiritual character, which began about the year 1678, and was carried on with great animofity and contention for feveral years after. The subject of this controversy was a right, called in France the regale, by which the French king, upon the death of a bishop, laid claim to the revenues and fruits of his fee, and discharged also several parts [g] of the epifcopal episcopal function, until a new bishop was elected. LEWIS was defirous that all the churches in his dominions should be subject to the regale. In-NOCENT pretended, on the contrary, that this claim could not be granted with fuch universality; nor would he confent to any augmentation of the prerogatives of this nature, that had formerly been enjoyed by the kings of France. Thus the claims of the prince, and the remonstrances of the pontif, both urged with warmth and perfeverance, formed a sharp and violent contest, which was carried on, on both fides, with spirit and refolution. The pontif fent forth his bulls and mandates. The monarch opposed their execution by the terror of penal laws, and the authority of fevere edicts against all who dared to treat them with the smallest regard. When the pontif refused to confirm the bishops that were nominated by the monarch, the latter took care to have them confecrated and inducted into their respective sees; and thus, in some measure, declared to the world, that the Gallican church could govern itself without the intervention of the Roman pontif. INNOCENT XI., who was a man of a high fpirit, and inflexibly obstinate in his purposes, did not lose courage at a view of thefe resolute and vigorous proceedings; but threatened the monarch with the divine vengeance, iffued out bull after bull, and did every thing in his power to convince his adverfaries, that the vigour and intrepidity, which formerly distinguished the lordly rulers of the Romish church, were not yet totally extinguished [b].

^[1] The large note [1] of the original, in which Dr. Mosheim has examined that interesting question, viz. Whether or no the papal authority gained or lost ground in France during the seventeenth century, is transposed by the translator into the text, and placed at the end of our author's account of Lewis XIV.'s quarrels with the pope, where it comes in with the utmost propriety. See § xxiii.

[[]f] See JAEGERI Hiftor. Ecclef. Sec. xvi. Decenn. vii. lib. ii. cap. ii. p. 180.—Voltaire, Siécle de Louis XIV. tom. 1. p. 134. Edit. de Dressle 1753.—Arckenholtz, Memoires de la Reine Christine, tom. ii. p. 72.

^{([}g] The author means here undoubtedly the collation of all benefices, which became vacant in the diocese of a deceafed

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

ceased bishop before the nomination of his successor. This right of collation, in such cases, was comprehended in the

Regale. See note [i].

[b] See Jo. Hen. Heideggeri Historia Papatûs, Period.
vii. § cccxli. p. 555.—Voltaire Siécle de Louis XIV. tom. i.
p. 221. Edit. de Drefde 1753. A great number of writers have

ither

This obstinacy, however, only ferved to add fuel c FNT. to the indignation and refentment of LTWIS. SECT. II. And accordingly, that monarch summoned the Part i famous assembly of bishops [i], which met at Paris, in the year 1682. In this convocation, the ancient doctrine of the Gallican church, that declares the power of the pope to be merely spiritual, and also inferior to that of a general council, was drawn up anew in four propositions [j], which were solemnly adopted by the whole as-either incidentally or professedly treated the subject of the Regale, and have given ample accounts of the controversies it has occasioned. But none has traced out more circumstantially the rise and progress of this samous right than Cardinal Henry Norts, in his Islania delle Investiture Ecolosias. p. 547, which is inserted in the fourth volume of his works.

$\mathcal{C}$ [i] This affembly, which confided of thirty-five bifhops, and as many deputies of the fecond Order, extended the Regale to all the churches in France without exception. The bifhops, at the fame time, thought proper to reprefent it to the king as their humble opinion, that those ecclessatios whom he should be pleased to nominate, during the vacancy of the fee, to benefices attended with cure of fouls, were obliged to apply for induction and confirmation to the grand vicars appointed by the chapters.

These four propositions were to the following pur-

pefe:
1. That neither St. Peter nor his fuccessors have received from God any power to interfere, directly or indirectly, in what concerns the temporal interests of princes and fovereign states; that kings and princes cannot be deposed by ecclesiaftical authority, nor their subjects freed from the facred obligation of sidelity and allegiance, by the power of the church, or the bulls of the Koman pontif.

2. That the decrees of the council of Conflance, which maintained the authority of general councils as superior to that of the pope's, in spiritual matters, are approved and adopted by the Gallican church.

3. That the rules, cultoms, inflitutions, and observances, which have been received in the Galliean church, are to be preferved inviolable.

4. That the decisions of the pope, in points of faith, are not infallible, unless they be attended with the consent of the church.

XVII. Sест. II. PART I.

CENT. fembly, and were proposed to the whole body of the clergy and to all the universities throughout the kingdom, as a facred and inviolable rule of faith. But even this respectable decision of the matter, which gave fuch a mortal wound to the authority of Rome, did not shake the constancy of its resolute ponuif, or reduce him to silence $\lceil k \rceil$.

Another contest arose, some time after the one now mentioned, between these two princes, whose mutual jealoufy and diflike of each other contributed much to inflame their divisions. new dispute broke out in the year 1687, when INNOCENT XI. wifely refolved to suppress the franchifes and the right of afylum that had formerly been enjoyed by the ambassadors residing at [k] This pope was far from keeping filence with respect to the famous propolitions mentioned in the preceding note. As they were highly unfavourable to his anthority, To he took care to have them refuted and opposed both in private and in public. The principal champion for the papal cause, on this occasion, was Cardinal Celestin Spondrati, who, in the year 1684, published, under the feigned name of Eugenius LOMBARDUS, a treatife entitled, Regale Sacardotium Romano Pontifici afferium, et quatuer propositionibus explicatum. This treatife was printed in Switzerland, as appears evidently by the characters or form of the letters. A multitude of Italian, German, and Spanish doctors flood forth to support the tottering majesty of the pontif against the court of France; and more especially the learned Nicolas Du Bois, professor at Louvain, whose writings in defence of the pope are mentioned by Bossuer. But all these papal champions were defeated by the famous prelate last mentioned, the learned and eloquent bishop of Meaux, who, by the king's special order, composed that celebrated work, which appeared after his death, in two volumes 4to, and in the year 1730, under the following title: Defensio Declarationis celeberrime, quam de Potestate Ecclesiaftica fansit Clerus Gallicanus, xix Martii, MDCLXXXII, Luxemburgi. The late publication of this work was owing to the prospect of a reconciliation between the courts of France and Rome, after the death of Innocent XI., which reconciliation actually took place, and engaged Lewis XIV, to prevent this work being put to the prefs.

Rome [1], and had, on many occasions, proved a C E N T. fanctuary for rapine, violence, and injustice, by SECT. H. procuring impunity for the most heinous male- PARTI. factors. The Marquis DE LAVARDIN refused, in the name of the French king, to submit to this new regulation; and Lewis took all the violent methods that pride and refentment could invent, to oblige the pontif to restore to his ambassador the immunities abovementioned [m]. Inno-CENT, on the other hand, perfifted in his purpofe, opposed the king's demands in the most open and intrepid manner, and could not be wrought upon by any confideration to yield, even in appearance, to his ambitious adversary [n]. His death, however, put an end to this long debate, which had proved really detrimental to both of the contending parties. His fucceffors, being men of a fofter and more complaifant disposition, were less averse to the concessions that were necessary to bring about a reconciliation, and to the meafures that were adapted to remove the chief causes of these unseemly contests. They were not, indeed, fo far unmindful of the papal dignity, and of the interests of Rome, as to patch up an agreement on inglorious terms. On the one hand, the right of afylum was suppressed with the king's consent; on the other, the right of the regale was fettled

^[1] This right of afylum extended much further than the ambaffador's palace, whole immunity the pope did not mean to violate; it comprehended a confiderable extent of ground, which was called a quarter, and undoubtedly gave occasion to great and crying abuses.

⁽F [m] The Marquis DE LAVARDIN began his embaffy by entering Rome, furrounded with a thousand men in arms.

[[]n] JAEGERI Historia Ecclesiastic. Szec. xvii. Decenn. iz. p. 19 .- Legatio LAVARDINI, which was published in 1688 .-But above all, Memoires de la Reine CHRISTINE, tom. ii. p. 248. For Christina took part in this contest, and adopted the cause of the French monarch.

XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

CENT. with certain modifications [0]. The four famous propositions, relating to the pope's authority and jurisdiction, were foftened, by the king's permission, in private letters addressed to the pontif by certain bishops; but they were neither abrogated by the prince, nor renounced by the clergy; on the contrary, they still remain in force, and occupy an eminent place among the laws of the kingdom.

Whether or no the papal authority gained ground in thacentury.

XXIII. [p] Several Protestant writers of eminent merit and learning, lament the accessions of power and authority which the Roman pontifs are supposed to have gained in France during the course of this century. They tell us, with forrow, that the Italian notions of the papal majesty and jurisdiction, which the French nation had, in former ages, looked upon with abhorrence, gained ground now, and had infected not only the nobility and clergy, but almost all ranks and orders of men; and from hence they conclude, that the famous rights and liberties of the Gallican church have fuffered greatly by the perfidious stratagems of the Jefuits. They are led into this opinion by certain measures that were taken by the French court, and which feemed to favour the pretentions of the Roman pontif. They are confirmed in it by the declamations of the Janfenifts, and other modern writers among the French, who complain of the high veneration that was paid to the papal bulls during this century; of the fuccess of the Jesuits in instilling into the mind of the king and his counfellors the maxims of Rome, and an excessive attachment to its bishop;

Fig. This & xaii. contains the ample note [1], which is to be found at p. 800, of the original. It comes in here with more propriety.

^[0] See Fleury, Inflitutions du Droit Ecclesiaftique François, which excellent work is translated into Latin. To Dr. Mo-SHEIM report to p. 454. of the Latin version.

of the violence and ill treatment that were offer- CENT. ed to all those who adhered stedfastly to the Sect. II. doctrine and maxims of their foresathers; and of PARTI. the gradual attempts that were made to introduce the formidable tribunal of the inquisition into France. But it will perhaps appear, on mature confideration, that too much firefs is laid, by many, on these complaints; and that the rights and privileges of the Gallican church were in this century, and are actually at this day, in the fame state and condition in which we find them during those earlier ages, of which the writers and declaimers abovementioned inceffantly boaft. It might be asked, where are the victories that are faid to have been obtained over the French by the popes of Rome, and which fome Protestant doctors, lending a credulous ear to the complaints of the Jansenists and Appellants, think they perceive with the utmost clearness? I am persuaded it would be difficult, if not impossible, to give a fatisfactory answer in the affirmative to this question.

It is true, indeed, that as the transactions of government, in general, are now carried on in France, with more fubtilty, fecrefy, and art, than in former times; fo, in particular, the firatagems and machinations of the Roman pontifs have been opposed and defeated with more artifice, and less noife, than in those more rude and unpolished ages, when almost every contest was terminated by brutal force and open violence. The opposition between the court of France and the bishop of Rome still subfists; but the manner of terminating their differences is changed; and their debates are carried on with less clamour, though not certainly with lefs animofity and vigour, than in the times of old. This new and prudent manner of disputing is not agreeable to the restless, fiery, and impatient temper of the French, who have

XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

CENT. an irrefistible propenfity to noify, clamorous, and expeditious proceedings; and hence undoubtedly arife all the complaints we have heard, and still hear, of the decline of the liberties of the Gallican church, in confequence of the growing influence and perfidious counfels of the Jefuits. If those, however, who are accustomed to make these complaints, would for a moment suspend their prejudices, and examine with attention the history, and also the present state of their country, they would foon perceive that their ecclefiaftical liberties [q], instead of declining, or of being neglected by their monarchs, are maintained and preserved with more care, resolution, and forefight, than ever. It must indeed be acknowledged, that, in France, there are multitudes of cringing flaves, who basely fawn upon the Roman pontifs, exalt their prerogatives, revere their majesty, and, through the dictates of superstition, interest, or ambition, are ever ready to hug the papal chain, and fubmit their necks blindly to the yoke of those ghostly tyrants. But it may be proved by the most undoubted facts, and by innumerable examples, that these servile creatures of the pope abounded as much in France in former ages as they do at this day; and it must be also confidered, that it is not by the counsels of this flavish tribe that the springs of government are moved, or the affairs of state and church transacted. It must be further acknowledged, ^[9] It is not necessary to advertise the reader, that by thefe liberties are not meant, that rational and Christian liberty which entitles every individual to follow the light of his own confcience and the dictates of his own judgment in religious matters; for no fuch liberty is allowed in France. The liberties of the Gallican church confift in the opposition which that church has made, at different times, to the overgrown power of the Roman pontif, and to his pretended perfonal infallibility.

PART I:

that the Jesuits had arrived at a very high degree C = N T. of influence and authority [r], and fometimes S = T T. have credit enough to promote measures that do not at all appear confistent with the rights of the Gallican church, and must consequently be confidered as heavy grievances by the patrons of the ancient ecclefiastical liberty. But here it may be observed, on the one hand, that many fuch measures have been proposed and followed before the rife of the Jesuits; and, on the other, that many affairs of great confequence are daily transacted in a manner highly displeasing and detrimental to that fociety, and extremely difagreeable to the Roman pontifs. If it be alleged, that those who defend with learning and judgment the ancient doctrines and maxims of the Gallican church fcarcely escape public censure and punishment, and that those who maintain them with vehemence and intemperate zeal are frequently rewarded with exile or a prison; nay, that the most humble and modest patrons of these doctrines are left in obscurity without encouragement or recompence: all this must be granted. But it must be considered, on the other hand, that the cause they maintain, and the ancient doctrines and maxims they defend, are not condemned, nor even deferted; the matter is only this, that the prince and his ministry have fallen upon a new method of maintaining and supporting them. It appears to them much more conducive to public peace and order, that the stratagems and attempts of the Roman pontifs should [r] Dr. Mosheim wrote this in the year 1753, before the suppression of the Order of Jesuits in France. The downfal of that fociety, and the circumstances that have attended it, feem both to illustrate and confirm his judicious notion with respect to the degree of credit and influence which the popes have had in that kingdom for some time past.

SECT. II. PART I.

CENT. be opposed and defeated by secret exertions of resolution and vigour, without noise or ostentation, than by learned productions and clamorous disputes; which, for the most part, excite factions in the kingdom, inflame the fpirits of the people, throw the state into tumult and confufion, exasperate the pontife, and alienate them ffill more and more from the French nation. the mean time the doctors and professors, who are placed in the various feminaries of learning, are left at liberty to instruct the youth in the ancient doctrine and discipline of the church, and to explain and inculcate those maxims and laws by which, in former times, the papal authority was reftrained and confined within certain limits. If these laws and maxims are infringed, and if even violent methods are employed against those who adhere fledfastly to them, this happens but very rarely, and never but when some case of extreme necessity, or the prospect of some great advantage to the community, abidutely require their fuspension. Beildes, those who sit at the political helm, always take care to prevent the pope's reaping much benefit from this fufpention or neglect of the ancient have and maxims of the church. This circumstance, which is of fo much importance in the prefeat question, must appear evident to fuch as will be at the pains to look into the history of the debates that attended, and the confermence that followed, the reception of the Bull Unigenities in France, than which no papal color could from more repugnant to the rights and liberties of the Galifean church. But in the I whiles of this Buil, as in other transactions of a Ik. nature, the court proceeded upon this policleal martin, that a finaller evil is to be fubmitfed to, when a greater may be thereby preventIn a word, the kings of France have almost al- C E N T. ways treated the Roman pontifs as the heroes, SECT. B. who are faid, in Pagan story, to have descended PARTS. into Tartarus, behaved towards the triple-jawed guardian of that lower region: fometimes they offered a foporiferous cake to suppress his grumbling and menacing tone; at others they terrified him with their naked fwords, and the din of arms; and this with a view to stop his barking, and to obtain the liberty of directing their course in the manner they thought proper. There is nothing invidious defigned by this comparison, which certainly represents, in a lively manner, the caresses and threatenings that were employed by the French monarchs, according to the nature of the times, the flate of affairs, the character of the pontifs, and other incidental circumstances, in order to render the court of Rome favourable to their defigns. We have dwelt, perhaps, too much upon this subject; but we thought it not improper to undeceive many Protestant writers, who, too much influenced by the bitter complaints and declamations of certain Jansenists, and not fufficiently instructed in the history of these ecclesiastical contentions, have formed erroneous notions concerning the point we have here endeavoured to examine and discuss.

XXIV. The corruptions that had been com-plained of in preceding ages, both in the higher clergy. and inferior Orders of the Romith clergy, were rather increased than diminished during this century, as the most impartial writers of that communion candidly confels. The bithops were rarely indebted for their elevation to their eminent learning or superior merit. The intercesfion of potent patrons, fervices rendered to men in power, connections of blood, and fimoniacal practices, were, generally speaking, the steps to preferment; and, what was ftill more deplorable.

XVII. SECT. II. PART I. their promotion was fometimes owing to their vices. Their lives were fuch, as might be expected from persons who had risen in the church by fuch unfeemly means; for had they been obliged, by their profession, to give public examples of those vices which the holy laws of the Gospel so solemnly and expressly condemn, instead of exhibiting patterns of sanctity and virtue to their flock, they could not have conducted themselves otherwise than they did [s]. Some indeed there were, who, fenfible of the obligations of their profession, displayed a true Christian zeal, in administering useful instruction, and exhibiting pious examples to their flock, and exerted their utmost vigour and activity in oppofing the vices of the facred Order in particular, and the licentiousness of the times in general. But these rare patrons of virtue and piety were either ruined by the refentment and stratagems of their envious and exasperated brothren, or were left in obfcurity, without that encouragement and fupport that were requifite to enable them to execute effectually their pious and laudable pur-The fame treatment fell to the lot of those among the lower order of the clergy, who endeavoured to maintain the cause of truth and virtue. But the number of fufferers in this noble cause was small, compared with the multitude of corrupt ecclefiaftics, who were carried away with the torrent, instead of opposing it, and whose lives were spent in scenes of pleasure, or in the anxiety and toils of avarice and ambition. While we acknowledge that, among the bishops and inferior clergy, there were feveral exceptions from C = N T that general prevalence of immorality and licen- S = C T. II. tiousness with which the facred Order was chargeable; it is also incumbent upon us to do justice to the merit of some of the Roman pontifs, in this century, who used their most zealous endeavours to reform the manners of the clergy, or, at least, to oblige them to observe the rules of external decency in their conduct and conversation. It is however matter of furprife, that these pontifs did not perceive the unfurmountable obstacles to the fuccess of their counsels, and the fruits of their wife and falutary edicts, that arcfe from the internal constitution of the Romish church, and the very nature of the papal government. For were the Roman pontifs even divinely inspired, and really infallible, yet unless this inspiration and infallibility were attended with a miraculous power, and with the supernatural privilege of being prefent in many places at the fame time; it is not conceivable how they should ever entertain a notion of the possibility of restoring or maintaining order, or good morals, among that prodigious multitude of persons of all classes and characters that are subject to their jurisdiction.

[[]s] The reader may fee these disagreeable accounts of the corruptions of the clergy contirmed by a great number of unexceptionable testimonies, drawn from the writings of the most eminent doctors of the Romish church, in the Memoires de Pert Royal, tom. ii. p. 308.

XXV. Though the monks, in feveral places, be- the monal-haved with much more circumfpection and decentic Orders. cy than in former times, yet they had every where departed, in a great measure, from the spirit of their founders, and the primitive laws of their respective institutions. About the commencement of this century, their convents and colleges made a most wretched and deplorable figure, as we learn from the accounts of the wifest and most learned even of their own writers. But we find, further on, feveral attempts made to remove this diforder. The first were made by some wife and pious Benedictines, who, in France, and other countries, reformed feveral monasteries of their M 3 Order,

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PARTI.

Order, and endeavoured to bring them back, as near as was possible, to the laws and discipline of their founder $\lceil t \rceil$. Their example was followed by the monks of Clugni, the Ciftercians, the regular canons, the Dominicans, and Franciscans $\lceil u \rceil$. It is from this period that we are to date the division of the monastic Orders into two general classes; one of these comprehends the Reformed monks, who, reclaimed from that licentiousness and corruption of manners that had formerly difhonoured their focieties, lead more strict and regular lives, and discover in their conduct a greater regard to the primitive laws of their Order. The other is composed of the Un-reformed Orders, who, forgetting the spirit of their founders, and the rules of their institute, spend their days in eafe and pleafure, and have no taste for the austerities and hardfhips of the monastic life. The latter class is by far the most numerous; and the greatest part, even of the Reformed monks, do not only come short of that purity of manners which their rule enjoins, but are moreover gradually

[1] LE BOEUF, Memoires fur l'Histoire d'Auserre, tom. ii. p. 513. where there is an account of the first Reforms made in the convents during this century.—See MARTENE'S Voyage

Litteraire de deux Benedictins, par. II. p. 97.

[u] There is an account of all the convents reformed in this century, in Helvor's Fifture des Ordres, tom. v, vi, vii. to which, however, feveral interefling circumflances may be added, by confulting other writers. The Reform of the Monks of Clugui is amply deferibed by the Benedictines, in the Gallia Chriftiana, tom. vii. p. 544. The fame authors speak of the Reform of the Regular Canons of St. Augustin, tom. vii. p. 778. 787. 790.—For an account of that of the Cifercians, see Mabillon, Annal. Benedicti. tom. vi. p. 121.—Vewage Litteraire de deux Benedictins, tom. i. p. 7, 8. tom. ii. p. 133. 229. 369. 303. The Cifercians were no sooner reformat themselves, than they used their most zealous endeavours for the reformation of the whole fociety (i.e. of the Benedictine Order), but in vain. See Meaurou, Vie de PAbbé de la Trappe, tom. i. p. 192.

and imperceptibly relapting into their former in- C E N T. dolence and diforder.

SECT. II.

The Congregation of St. Maur.

XXVI. Among the Reformed montes, a parti- PARTI. cular degree of attention is due to certain Benedictine focieties, or congregations, who furpals all the other monastic Orders, both in the excellence and utility of their rules and constitution, and in the zeal and perfeverance with which they adhere to them. The most famous of these societies is the Congregation of St. Maur [w], which was founded in the year 1620, by the express order of GRE-GORY XV., and was enriched by URBAN VIII., in the year 1627, with feveral donations and privileges. It does not indeed appear, that even this fociety adheres strictly to the spirit and maxims of BENEDICT, whose name it bears, nor is it beyond the reach of cenfure in other respects; but these imperfections are compensated by the great number of excellent rules and institutions that are observed in it, and by the regular lives and learned labours of its members. For in this congregation there is a felect number of persons, who are distinguished by their genius and talents, set apart for the fludy of facred and profane literature, and more especially of history and antiquities; and this learned part of the fociety is fur-

[w] See the Gallia Christiana Nova, an admirable work, composed by the Congregation of St. Maur, tom. vii. p. 474. HELYOT, Histoire des Ordres, tom. vi. cap. xxxvii. p. 256. The letters patent of Pope Gregory XV., by which the ellablishment of this famous congregation was approved and confirmed, were criticised with great severity and rigour by LAUNOY, that formidable fcourge of all the Monastic Orders, in his Examen privil. S. Germani, tom, iii. p. i. opp. p. 303. The fame author gives an account of the differences that arose in this congregation immediately after its establishment; but an account which favours too much of that partiality that he was chargeable with, whenever he treated of monaftic affairs; fee tis Affort. Inquifit. in privil. S. Medardi, p. i. cap. lxxvi. p. 227. tom. iii. opp. p. 2.

CENT. nished with all the means and materials of knowXVII.

SECT. II. ledge in a rich abundance, and with every thing

PART I that can tend to facilitate their labours and render them fuccessful [x]. It must be abundantly known,

[x] The Benedictines celebrate, in pompous terms, the exploits of this congregation in general, and more especially their zealous and fuccefsful labours in reftoring order, discipline, and virtue, in a great number of monasteries, which were falling into ruin through the indolence and corruption of their licentious members; See the Voyage de deux Religieux Benedictins de la Congregation de S. Maur, tom. i. p. 16. tom. ii. p. 47. This eulogy, though perhaps exaggerated, is not entirely unmerited; and there is no doubt but the Benedictines have contributed much to reftore the credit of the monaftic There are, nevertheless, several classes of ecclefiaftics in the Romish church, who are no well-wishers to this learned congregation, though their diflike be founded on different reasons. In the first class, we may place a certain number of ambitious prelates, whose artful purposes have been difappointed by this ingenious fraternity; for the monks of St. Maur, having turned their principal study towards ancient history and antiquities of every kind, and being perfectly acquainted with ancient records, diplomas, and charters, are thus peculiarly qualified to maintain their possessions, their jurisdiction, and privileges, against the litigious pretensions of the bishops, and have, in fact, maintained them with more success than their Order could do in former times, when destitute of learning, or but ill furnished with the knowledge of ancient history. The Jesuits form the second class of adversaries, with whom this learned congregation has been obliged to ftruggle; for their luftre and reputation being confiderably eclipfed by the numerous and admirable productions of these Benedictines, they have used their utmost endeavours to fink, or at least to diminish, the credit of such formidable rivals. See SIMON, Lettres Choifies, tom. iv. p. 36. 45. These Benedictines have a third fet of enemies, who are infligated by superstition; and it is not improbable, that this superfition may be accompanied with a certain mixture of envy. To understand this fully, it must be observed, that the learned Monks, of whom we are now fpeaking, have fubflituted an affiduous application to the culture of philology and literature in the place of that bodily and manual labour which the Rule of St. Benedict prescribes to his followers. The more robust, healthy, and vigorous Monks, are obliged to employ a certain portion of the day in working with their hands; while those of a weaker confitution, and fuperior genius, are allowed to exchange bodily for known, to those who have any acquaintance with CENT. the history and progress of learning in Europe, Sect. II. what signal advantages the republic of letters has derived from the establishment of this samous Congregation, whose numerous and admirable productions have cast a great light upon all the various branches of philology and Belles Lettres, and whose researches have taken in the whole circle of science, philosophy excepted [y].

mental labour, and, instead of cultivating the lands or gardens of the convent, to fpend their days in the purfuit of knowledge, both human and divine. The lazy Monks envy this bodily repose; and the superstitious and fanatical ones, who are vehemently prejudiced in favour of the ancient monastic discipline, behold, with contempt, these learned researches as unbecoming the monaftic character, fince they tend to divert the mind from divine contemplation. This fuperflitious and abfurd opinion was maintained, with peculiar warmth and vehemence, by Armand John Bouthelier de Rance, abbot of La Trappe, in his book Des devoirs monastiques; upon which the Benedictines employed Mabilion, the most learned of their fraternity, to defend their cause, and to expose the reveries of the abbot in their proper colours. This he did with remarkable fuccess, in his famous book De Studiis monafficis, which was first published in 8vo at Paris in the year 1691, passed afterwards through feveral editions, and was translated into different languages. Hence arose that celebrated question, which was long debated with great warmth and animofity in France, viz. How far a monk may, confiftently with his character, apply himself to the sludy of literature? There is an elegant and interesting history of this controverfy given by VIN-CENT THULLIER, a most learned monk of the congregation of St. Maur; fee the Opera Posthuma MABILLONII et Rui-NARTH, tom. i. p. 365-425.

[y] The curious reader will find an account of the authors and learned productions with which the congregation of St. Maur has enriched the republic of letters, in Ph. LE CERF'S Bibliothéque Historique et Critique des Auteurs de la Congregation de St. Maur, published at the Hague in 8vo in 1726; and also in Bernard Pez's Eibliotheca Benedictino-Mariana, published in 8vo at Aug flourg in 1716.—These Benedictines still maintain their literary fame by the frequent publication of laborious and learned productions in all the various branches of facred and profane literature.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

XXVII. Though these pious attempts to reform the monasteries were not entirely unsuccessful, yet the effects they produced, even in those places where they had fucceeded most, came far fhort of that perfection of austerity that had feized the imaginations of a fet of perfons, whose number is confiderable in the Romish church, though their credit be finall, and their feverity be generally looked upon as excessive and disgusting. These rigid censors, having always in their eye the ancient discipline of the monastic Orders, and bent on reducing the modern convents to that austere discipline, looked upon the changes abovementioned as imperfect and trifling. They confidered a monk as a person obliged, by the sanctity of his profession, to spend his whole days in prayers, tears, contemplation, and filence; in the perufal of holy books, and the hardships of bodily labour; nay, they went fo far as to maintain, that all other defigns, and all other occupations, however laudable and excellent in themfelves, were entirely foreign from the monaftic vocation, and, on that account, vain and finful in persons of that Order. This severe plan of monastic discipline was recommended by several perfons, whose obscurity put it out of their power to influence many in its behalf; but it was also adopted by the Jansenists, who reduced it to practice in certain places [z], and in none with more fuccess and reputation than in the female convent of Port-Royal, where it has subsisted from the year CENT. 1618 until our time [a]. These steps of the Jan- SECT. II. senists excited a spirit of emulation, and several PARTI. monasteries exerted themselves in the imitation of this auftere model; but they were all furpaffed by the famous Bouthillier de Rance, abbot de la Trappe [b], who, with the most ardent zeal, and indefatigable labour, attended with uncommon fuccefs, introduced into his monastery this discipline, in all its auftere and shocking perfection. This abbot, fo illustrious by his birth, and fo remarkable for his extraordinary devotion, was fo happy as to vindicate his fraternity from the charge of excessive superstition, which the Janse-

[[]x] See the Memoires de Port-Royal, tom. ii. p. 601, 602.— MARTIN BARCOS, the most celebrated Jansenist of this century, introduced this austere rule of discipline into the monastery of St. Cyran, of which he was abbot. See the Gallia Christiana, tom. ii. p. 132.—MOLEON, Voyages Liturgiques, p. 135. But, after the death of this famous abbot, the monks of his cloyster relapsed into their former disorder, and refumed their former manners. See Voyage de deux Benediāins, tom. i. p. is p. 18.

[a] HELYOT, Hifloire des Ordres, tom. v. chap. xliv. p.

455.

F [1] This illustrious abbot shewed very early an extraordinary genius for the Belles Lettres. At the age of ten, he was mafter of feveral of the Greek and Roman poets, and understood Homer perfectly. At the age of twelve or thirteen, he gave an edition of Anacreon, with learned Annotations. Some writers allege, that he had imbibed the voluptuous spirit of that poet, and that his fubfequent application to the fludy of theology in the Sorbonne did not extinguish it entirely. They also attribute his conversion to a singular incident. They tell us, that returning from the country, after fix weeks ablence from a lady whom he loved paffionately (and not in vain), he went directly to her chamber by a back flair, without having the patience to make any previous enquiry about her health and fituation. On opening the door, he found the chamber illuminated, and hung with black; -and, on approaching the bed,-faw the most hideous spectacle that could be presented to his eyes, and the most adapted to mortify passion, inspire horror, and engender the gloom of melancholy devotion, in a mind too lively and too much agitated to improve this shocking change to the purposes of rational piety: he saw his fair midrefs in her fhroud-dead of the fmall-pox-all her charms fled-and fucceeded by the ghaftly lines of death, and the frightful marks of that terrible diforder. - From that moment. it is faid, our abbot retired from the world, repaired to La Treppe, the most gloomy, barren, and defolate spot in the whole kingdom of France, and there spent the forty last years of his life in perpetual acts of the most austere piety.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART 1.

nists had drawn upon themselves by the austerity of their monastic discipline; and yet his society observed the severe and laborious rule of the ancient Ciftercians, whom they even furpaffed in abstinence, mortifications, and felf-denial. This Order still subsists, under the denomination of the Reformed Bernardins of La Trappe, and has feveral monasteries both in Spain and Italy; but, if credit may be given to the accounts of writers who feem to be well informed, it is degenerating gradually from the austere and painful discipline of its famous founder $\lceil c \rceil$.

New monaflic orders founded.

XXVIII. The Romish church, from whose prolific womb all the various forms of superstition issued forth in an amazing abundance, saw several new monastic establishments arise within its borders during this century. The greatest part of them we shall pass over in silence, and confine ourselves to the mention of those which have obtained fome degree of fame, or at least made a certain noife in the world.

We begin with the Fathers of the oratory of the Holy Jefus, a famous Order, instituted by Cardinal BERULLE, a man of genius and talents, who difplayed his abilities with fuch fuccess, in the fervice both of state and church, that he was generally looked upon as equally qualified for thining in these very different spheres. This Order, which both in the nature of its rules, and in the defign of its establishment, seems to be in direct opposition to that of the Jesuits, was founded in the year 1613, has produced a confiderable number of perfons eminent for their piety, learning, and elo- CENT. quence, and still maintains its reputation in this SECT. II. respect. Its members however have, on account of certain theological productions, been suspected of introducing new opinions; and this fuspicion has not only been raifed, but is also industriously fomented and propagated, by the Jesuits. The priefts who enter into this fociety are not obliged to renounce their property or possessions, but only to refuse all ecclesiastical cures or offices to which any fixed revenues or honours are annexed, as long as they continue members of this fraternity, from which they are, however, at liberty to retire whenever they think proper $\lceil d \rceil$. While they continue in the Order, they are bound to perform, with the greatest fidelity and accuracy, all the priestly functions, and to turn the whole bent of their zeal and industry to one fingle point, even the preparing and qualifying themfelves and others for discharging them daily with greater perfection, and more abundant fruits. If, therefore, we confider this Order in the original end of its institution, its convents may, not improperly, be called the schools of facerdotal divinity $\lceil e \rceil$. It is nevertheless to be observed, that, in later times, [[]d] The Fathers or Priefts (as they are also called) of the oratory, are not, properly fpeaking, religious or monks, being bound by no vows, and their inflitute being purely ecclefiaftical or facerdotal.

[[]c] MARSOLIER, Vie de l'Abbé de la Trappe, published at Paris in 1702 in 4to, and in 1703 in 2 vols. 12mo. - MEAU-POU, Vie de M. l'Abbé de la Trappe, published at Paris in 2 vols. 8vo, in 1702.—Felibien, Description de l'Abbaye de la Trappe, published at Paris in 1671 .- HELYOT, Histoire des Ordres, tom. vi. chap. i. p. 1.

[[]e] See HABERT DE CERISI, Vie du Cardinal BERULLE, fondateur de l'Oratoire de Jesus, published at Paris in 4to in the year 1646.—Morini Vita Antiqq. presixed to his Orientalia, p. 3, 4, 5. 110.—R. Simon, Lettres Choifies, tom. ii. p. 60. et Bibliothéque Critique (published under the sictitious name of Saint Jorre), tom. iii. p. 303. 324. 330. For an account of the genius and capacity of Berulle, fee Balllee, Vie de Richer, p. 220—342.—Le Vassor, Histoire de Louis XIII., tom. iii. p. 397.—Helyot, Histoire des Ordres, tom. viii. chap. x. p. 53.—Gallia Christiana Benedictinor. tom. vii. p. 976.

SECT. II. PART I.

CENT. the Fathers of the Oratory have not confined them: felves to this fingle object, but have imperceptibly extended their original plan, and applied themfelves to the study of polite literature and theology, which they teach with reputation in their colleges $\lceil f \rceil$.

After these Fathers, the next place is due to the Priests of the Missions, an Order founded by VIN-CENT DE PAUL (who has obtained, not long ago, the honours of faintship), and formed into a regular congregation, in the year 1632, by Pope URBAN VIII. The rule prescribed to this society, by its founder, lays its members under the three following obligations: First, to purify themfelves, and to afpire daily to higher degrees of fanctity and perfection, by prayer, meditation, the perufal of pious books, and other devout exercifes: Secondly, to employ eight months of the year in the villages, and, in general, among the country-people, in order to instruct them in the principles of religion, form them to the practice of piety and virtue, accommodate their differences, and administer consolation and relief to the fick and indigent: Thirdly, to inspect and govern the feminaries in which persons defigned for holy orders receive their education, and to instruct the candidates for the ministry in the sciences that relate to their respective vocations [g].

The Pricsts of the missions were also intrusted with the direction and government of a Female Order called Virgins of Love, or Daughters of Charity, whose office it was to administer affiftance

[[]f] The Fathers of the Oratory will now be obliged, in a more particular manner, to extend their plan; fince, by the suppression of the Jesuits in France, the education of youth is committed to them.

[[]g] ABELY Vie de VINCENT DE PAUL, published in 4to at Paris in 1664.-HELYOT, locacit. tom. viii. chap. xi. p. 64. -Gallia Chriftiana, tom. vii. p. 998.

and relief to indigent persons, who were confined CENT. to their beds by fickness and infirmity. This SECT. II, Order was founded by a noble virgin, whose PART L. name was Louisa LE Gras, and received, in the year 1660, the approbation of Pope CLEMENT IX. [b].—The Brethren and Sifters of the pious and Ghriftian schools, who are now commonly called Pietists, were formed into a fociety in the year 1678, by Nicholas Barre, and obliged, by their engagements, to devote themselves to the education of poor children of both fexes $\lceil i \rceil$. It would be endless to mention all the religious societies which rose and fell, were formed by fits of zeal, and diffolved by external incidents, or by their own internal principles of instability and decay.

XXIX. If the Company of Jujus, fo called, The fociety which may be confidered as the foul of the papal hierarchy, and the main fpring that directs its motions, had not been invincible, it must have funk under the attacks of those formidable enemies that, during the course of this century, affailed it on all fides and from every quarter. When we confider the multitude of the advertaries the Jefuits had to encounter, the heinous crimes with which they were charged, the innumerable affronts they received, and the various calamities in which they were involved, it must appear astonishing that they yet subfift; and still more fo, that they enjoy any degree of public esteem, and are not, on the contrary, funk in oblivion, or covered with infamy. In France, Holland, Poland, and Italy, they experienced, from time to time, the bitter effects of a warm and vehement opposition, and were, both in public and private, accused of the greatest enormities, and charged with maintaining pestilential errors and maxims, that were equally destructive of the temporal and eternal interests of mankind, by their tendency to extinguish the spirit of true religion, and to trouble the order and peace of civil fociety. The Jansenists, and all who espoused their cause, distinguished themselves more especially in this opposition. They composed an innumerable multitude of books, in order to cover the fons of LOYOLA with eternal reproach, and to expose them to the hatred and fcorn of the whole universe. Nor were these productions mere defamatory libels, dictated by malice alone, or pompous declamations, destitute of arguments and evidence. On the contrary, they were attended with the strongest demonstration, being drawn from undeniable facts, and confirmed by unexceptionable testimonies $\lceil k \rceil$.

[[]b] Gobillon, Vie de Madame DE CRAS, Fondatrice des Filles de la Charité, published in 12mo at Paris, in the year 1676.

[[]i] HELYOT, Histoire des Ordrus, tom. vill. chap. xxx. p. 233.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

[1] An account of this opposition to, and of these contests with, the Jesuits, would furnish matter for many volumes; fince there is fearcely any Roman Catholic country which has not been the theatre of violent divisions between the sons of LOYOLA, and the magistrates, monks, or doctors, of the Romish Church. In these conteits, the Jesuits seemed almost always to be vanquished; and nevertheless, in the issue, they always came victorious from the field of controverfy. A Janfenist writer proposed, some years ago, to collect into one relation the accounts of these contests that he dispersed in a multitude of books, and to give a complete history of this famous Order. The first volume of his work accordingly appeared at Utrecht, in the year 1741, was accompanied with a curious Preface, and entitled Histoire des Religieum de la Compagnie de Jejus. If we may give credit to what this writer tells us of the voyages he undertook, the dangers and difficulties he encountered, and the number of years he fpent in investigating the proceedings, and in detecting the frauds and artifices, of the Jefuits, we must certainly be perfuaded, that no man could be better qualified for composing the history of this infidious Order. But this good man, returning imprudently into France, was difcovered by his exasperated enomies the Jesuits, and is 16

Yet all this was far from overturning that fabric CENT. of profound and infidious policy which the Je- SECT. II. fuits had raifed, under the protection of the Ro. PART I. man pontifs, and the connivance of deluded princes and nations. It feemed, on the contrary, as if the opposition of fuch a multitude of enemies and accufers had strengthened their interest faid to have perished miserably by their hands. Hence not above a third part of his intended work was either published or finished for the press. Some things may be added, both by way of correction and illustration, to what Dr. Mosheim has here faid concerning this history of the Jesuits and its author. In the first place, its author or compiler is still alive, refides at the Hague, paffes by the name of BENARD, is supposed to be a Janfenist, and a relation of the famous Father Que-NEL, whom the Jesuits perfecuted with such violence in France. He is a native of France, and belonged to the oratory. It is also true, that he went thither from Holland several years ago; and it was believed, that he had fallen a victim to the refentment of the Jefuits, until his return to the Hague proved that report false. Secondly, This history is carried no further down than the year 1572, notwithstanding the express promifes and engagements by which the author bound himfelf, four and twenty years ago (in the Preface to his first volume), to publish the whole in a very short time, declaring that it was ready for the prefs. This fulpenfion is far from being honourable to Mr. Benard, who is still living at the Hague, and confequently at full liberty to accomplish his promife. This has made fome fulpect, that, though Mr. BENARD is too much out of the Jefuits reach to be influenced by their threatenings, he is not, however, too far from them to be moved by the eloquence of their promifes, or fledfaft enough to fland out against the weighty remonstrances they may have employed to prevent the further publication of his hillory. It may be observed thirdly, that the character of a traveller, who has fludied the manners and conduct of the Jetaits in the most remarkable feenes of their transactions in Europe, and the other parts of the globe, is here assumed by Mr. Benard as the most pleafing manner of conveying the accounts which he compiled in his closet. These accounts don't appear to be falle, though the character of a traveller, assumed by the compiler, be fictitious. It must be allowed, on the contrary, that Mr. Benard has drawn his relations from good fources, though his ftyle and manner cannot well be juddied from the charge of acrimony and malignity.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART 1.

instead of diminishing it, and added to their affluence and prosperity instead of bringing on their destruction. Amidst the storm that threatened them with a fatal shipwreck, they directed their course with the utmost dexterity, tranquillity, and prudence. Thus they got fafe into the defired harbour, and arose to the very summit of fpiritual authority in the church of Rome. ing rather than repelling the affaults of their enemies, opposing for the most part patience and filence to their redoubled infults, they proceeded uniformly and stedsastly to their great purpose, and they feem to have attained it. For those very nations who formerly looked upon a Jefuit as a kind of monster, and as a public pest, commit, at this day, fome through necessity, fome through choice, and others through both, a great part of their interests and transactions to the direction of this most artful and powerful fociety $\lceil l \rceil$. $\bar{X}XX$. All

[/] It may perhaps be affirmed with truth, that none of the Roman Catholic nations attacked the Jefuits with more vehemence and animofity than the French have done upon feveral occasions; and it is certain, that the Jesuits in that kingdom have been, more than once, involved in great difficulties and diffrefs. To be convinced of this, the reader has only to confult Du Boulay's Historia Academia Parisiensis, tom. vi. p. 559. 648. 676. 738. 742. 744. 763. 774. 874. 890. 898. 909. in which he will find an ample and accurate account of the refolutions and transactions of the Parliament and University of Paris, and also of the proceedings of the people in general, to the detriment of this artful and dangerous fociety. what was the final iffue of all thefe refolutions and transactions, and in what did all this opposition end? I answer, in the exaltation and grandeur of the Jefuits. They had been banished with ignominy out of the kingdom, and were recalled from their exile, and honourably reflored to their former credit, in the year 1604, under the reign of HENRY IV., notwithstanding the remonstrances of many persons of the highest rank and dignity, who were shocked beyond expression at this unaccountably mean and ignoble step. See Memoires de Sully (the modern edition published at Geneva), tom. 5. p. 83. 314. After

XXX. All the different branches of literature c E N T. received, during this century, in the more polith- NECT. II. ed Roman-Catholic countries, a new degree of PART I. lustre and improvement. France, Spain, Italy, The flate of and the Netherlands, produced feveral men emi-nent for their genius, erudition, and acquaintance of Rome. with the learned languages. This happy circumstance must not, however, be attributed to the labour of the schools, or to the methods and procedure of public education; for the old, dry, perplexing, inelegant, scholastic method of inftruction prevailed then, and indeed still takes place in both the higher and lower feminaries of learning; and it is the peculiar tendency of this method to damp genius, to deprefs, instead of exciting and encouraging, the generous efforts of the mind towards the pursuit of truth, and to load the memory with a multitude of infignificant words and useless distinctions. It was beyond the borders of these pedantic seminaries, that genius was encouraged, and directed by great and eminent patrons of science, who opened new paths to the attainment of folid learning, and prefented the feiences under a new and engaging aspect to the studious youth. It must be observed here, in justice to the French, that they bore a distinguished part in this literary reformation.-Excited by their native force of genius, and animated by the encouragement that learning and learned men received from the munificence of Lewis XIV., they cultivated with fuecess almost all the various branches of literature, and, rejecting the barbarous jargon of the schools, exhibited

After that period, they moved the main-springs of government both in church and flate, and flill continue to fit, though invifibly, at the helm of both. 😂 The reader must again be advertised, that this note was written by Dr. Moshers force years before the suppression of the society of the Jesuits in France.

CENT. learning under an elegant and alluring form, and SECT. II. thereby multiplied the number of its votaries and P_{ART} I. patrons $\lceil m \rceil$. It is well known how much the example and labours of this polite nation contributed to deliver other countries from the yoke of fcholastic bondage.

The state of philosophy.

XXXI. The Aristotelians of this century were a fet of intricate dialecticians, who had the name of the Stagirite always in their mouths, without the least portion of his genius, or any tolerable knowledge of his fystem; and they maintained their empire in the schools, notwithstanding the attempts that had been made to diminish their credit. It was long before the court of Rome, which beheld with terror whatever bore the fmallest aspect of novelty, could think of consenting to the introduction of a more rational philosophy, or permit the modern discoveries in that noble fcience to be explained with freedom in the public feminaries of learning. This appears fufficiently from the fate of GALILEI, the famous mathematician of Florence, who was cast into prison by the court of Inquifition, for adopting the fentiments of COPERNICUS, in relation to the constitution of the folar fystem. It is true, indeed, that DES CARTES and Gassendi [n], the one by his new philosophy, and the other by his admirable writings, gave a mortal wound to the Peripatetics, and excited a fpirit of liberty and emulation that changed the face of frience in France. It was under the aufoicious influence of these adventurous guides, that several eminent men of that nation abandoned the perplexed and intricate wilds of the philo- C ENT. fophy that was taught by the modern Aristote- SECT. II. lians; and, throwing off the shackles of mere au- PART Ithority, dared to confult the dictates of reason and experience, in the study of nature, and in the investigation of truth. Among these converts to true philosophy, several Jesuits, and a still greater number of Janscnists and Priests of the Oratory, distinguished themselves; and, accordingly, we find this lift the respectable names of MALE-BRANCHE, ARNAULD, LAMI, NICOLE, PASCAL, who acquired immortal fame by illustrating and improving the doctrine of Des Cartes, and accommodating it to the purposes of human life [0]. The modelty, circumspection, and self-diffidence of GASSENDI, who confessed the scanty measure of his knowledge, and pretended to no other merit than that of pointing out a rational method of arriving at truth, while others boafted that they had already found it out, rendered him difagreeable in France. The ardent curiofity, the fervor, precipitation, and impatience of that lively people, could not bear the flow and cautious method of proceeding that was recommended by the cool wifdom of this prudent inquirer. They wanted to get at the fummit of philosophy, without climbing the steps that lead to it.

[[]m] For an ample account of this matter, fee Voltaire's She'le de Louis XIV., and more especially the Chapters in the leron't rolame relative to the Arts and Sciences.

^[11] See Gassendi Exercitationes Parademe adversus Aristoteless, Operam, tom. iii. This fubtile and judicious work contributed, perhaps, more than any thing elfe, to hurt the cause, and ruin the credit, of the Peripacetics.

^[0] These great men were, indeed, very ill treated by the Peripatetics, on account of their learned and excellent labours. They were accused by these exasperated scholastics of irreligion; and were even charged with Atheism by Father HAR-DOUIN, who was really intoxicated with the large draughts he had taken from the muddy fountains of Peripatetic and Scholastic science. See his Athei Detesti, in his Opp. Posthum. p. 1. and 1259 .- It is easy to perceive the reasons of all this refentment; fince the Cartefian fystem, which aimed at restoring the authority of reason and the light of true philosophy, was by no means fo proper to defend the pretentions of Rome and the cause of Popery, as the dark and intricate jargon of the Peripatetics.

CENT. SFOT. II. PART I.

Towards the conclusion of this century, many eminent men, in Italy and in other countries, followed the example of the French, in throwing off the yoke of the Peripatetics, and venturing into the paths that were newly opened for the investigation of truth. This defertion of the old philo-Tophy was at first attended with that timorousness and fecrecy that arose from apprehensions of the displeasure and resentment of the court of Rome; but, as foon as it was known that the Roman pontifs beheld with lefs indignation and jealoufy the new discoveries in metaphysics, mathematics, and natural philosophy, than the deferters broke their chains with greater confidence, and proceeded with greater freedom and boldness in the purfuit of truth.

tive merit of leiuits, Benedictines, Priefts of and Janfe-mill-, in the cultivation oi facred and protane literature.

The refeec-

XXXII. After this general account of the state of learning in the Roman-Catholic countries, it will not be improper to point out, in a more parthe Oratory, ticular manner, those of the Romish writers, who contributed most to the propagation and improvement both of facred and profane erudition during the course of this century. The Jesuits were, for a long time, not only possessed of an undisputed pre-eminence in this respect, but were, moreover, confidered as almost the sole fountains of univerfal knowledge, and the only religious Order that made any figure in the literary world. And it must be confessed by all, who are not misled by want of candour or of proper information, that this famous fociety was adorned by many persons of uncommon genius and learning. The names of Petau, Sirmond, Poussines, Labbe, and ABRAM, will live as long as letters shall be held in honour; and even that of Hardouin, notwithstanding the singularity of his disordered fancy, and the extravagance of many of his opinions, will escape oblivion.

It is at the fame time to be observed, that the CENT. literary glory of the Jesuits suffered a remarkable SECT. II. eclipse, during the course of this century, from PART I. the growing lustre of the Benedictine Order, and more especially of the Congregation of St. Maur. The Jesuits were perpetually boasting of the eminent merit and lustre of their fociety on the one hand, and exposing, on the other, to public contempt, the ignorance and flupidity of the Benedictines, who, indeed, formerly made a very different figure from what they do at present. Their view in this was to form a plaufible pretext for invading the rights of the latter, and engroffing their ample revenues and poffessions; but the Benedictines resolved to disconcert this insidious project, to wipe off the reproach of ignorance that had heretofore been cast upon them with too much justice, and to disappoint the rapacious avidity of their enemies, and rob them of their pretexts. For this purpose they not only erected schools in their monasteries, for the instruction of youth in the various branches of learning and fcience, but also employed such of their select members, as were diffinguished by their erudition and genius, in composing a variety of learned productions, that were likely to furvive the waste of time, adapted to vindicate the honour of the fraternity, and to reduce its enemies to filence. This important task has been executed with incredible ability and fuccess by Mabillon, D'A-CHERY, MASSUET, RUINART, BEAUGENDRE, GAR-NIER, DE LA RUE, MARTENF, MONTFAUCON, and other eminent men of that learned Order. It is to these Benedictines that we are indebted for the best editions of the Greek and Latin fathers; for the discovery of many curious records and ancient documents, that throw a new light upon the history of remote ages, and upon the antiquities of various countries; for the best accounts of N 4 ancient litical, and of the manners and customs of the PART I. earliest times; for the improvement of chronology, and the other branches of literature. In all these parts of philology and Belles Lettres, the religious Order, now under confideration, has shone with a distinguished lustre, and given specimens of their knowledge, discernment, and industry, that are worthy of being transmitted to the latest posterity. It would be perhaps difficult to affign a reason for that visible decline of learning among the Jesuits, that commenced precifely at that very period when the Benedictines began to make this eminent figure in the republic of letters. The fact, however, is undeniable; and the Jesuits have long been at a loss to produce any one or more of their members who are qualified to dispute the pre-eminence, or even to claim an equality, with the Benedictines. latter still continue to shine in the various branches of philology, and, almost every year, enrich the literary world with productions that furnish abundant proofs of their learning and industry; whereas, if we except a fingle work, published by the Jesuits of Antwerp, many years have passed fince the sons of LOVOLA have given any satisfactory proofs of their boafted learning, or added to the mass of literature any work worthy to be compared with the labours of the followers of BE-MEDICT.

CENT. ancient transactions, whether ecclesiastical or po-Sест. II.

These learned monks excited the emulation of the Priests of the Oratory, whose efforts to refemble them were far from being destitute of success. Several members of this latter Order distinguished themselves by their remarkable proficiency in various branches both of facred and profane literature. This, to mention no more examples, appears fufficiently from the writings of Morin, THOMASSIN, and SIMON, and from that admirable work

Work of Charles DE Cointe, entitled The Ec- CENT. clefiaftical Annals of France. The Janfenists also Sect. I. deserve a place in the list of those who cultivated PART I. letters with industry and success. Many of their productions abound with erudition, nay feveral of them excel both in elegance of stile and precifion of method; and it may be faid, in general, that their writings were eminently ferviceable in the instruction of youth, and also proper to contribute to the progress of learning among persons of riper years. The writings of those who composed the community of Port-Royal [p], the works of TILLEMONT, ARNAUD, NICOLE, PAS-CAL, and LANCELOT, with many other elegant and useful productions of persons of this class, were undoubtedly an ornament to French literature during this century. The other religious focieties, the higher and lower orders of the clergy, had also among them men of learning and genius that reflected a lustre upon the respective classes to which they belonged. Nor ought this to be a matter of admiration; fince nothing is more natural than that, in an immense multitude of monks and clergy, all possessed of abundant lei-fure for study, and of the best opportunities of improvement, there should be some who, unwilling to hide or throw away fuch a precious talent, would employ with fuccess this leifure, and these opportunities, in the culture of the sciences. is nevertheless certain, that the eminent men who were to be found beyond the limits of the four [[]p] Mefficurs de Port-Royal was a general denomination, which comprehended all the Janfenift writers, but was however applied, in a more confined and particular fenfe, to thofe Janfenifts who paffed their days in pious exercifes and literary purfuits in the retreat of Port-Royal, a manfion fituated at a little dillance from Paris. It is well known, that feveral writers of fuperior genius, extensive learning, and uncommon eloquence, refided in this fanctuary of letters.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

The principal authors of the Remish communion. classes already mentioned [q], were few in number, comparatively speaking, and scarcely exceeded the list that any of these classes was able to surnish.

XXXIII. Hence it comes, that the church of Rome can produce a long lift of writers that have arisen in its bosom, and acquired a shining and permanent reputation, by their learned productions. At the head of the eminent authors which we find among the monastic orders and the regular clergy, must be placed the Cardinals BARO-NIUS and BELLARMINE, who have obtained an immortal name in their church, the one by his laborious Annals, and the other by his books of Con-The other writers that belong to this troverfy. class, are—Serrarius—Fevardentius—Posse-VIN-GRETSER-COMBEFIS-NATALIS ALEXAN-DER-BECAN-SIRMOND-PETAU-POUSSINES-CFILOT --- CAUSSIN --- MORIN --- RENAUD --- FRA-PAOLO-PALLAVICINI--LABBE---MAIMBURG-THOMASSIN-SFONDRAT-AGUIRRE-HENRY NORIS -- D'ACHERY -- MABILLON -- HARDOUIN -SIMON-RUINART-MONTFAUCON-GALLONI -SCACCHI-CORNELIUS A LAPIDE-BONFRERE -MENARD-SEGUENOT-BERNARD-LAMY-BOLLAND—HENSCHEN—PAPEBROCH—and others.

The principal among the fecular clergy, who are neither bound by vows, nor attached to any peculiar community and rules of difcipline, were—Perron—Estius—Launoy—Albaspinæus—Petrus de Marca—Richlieu—Holstenius—Baluze—Bona—Huet—Bossuet—Fenelon—Godeau—Tillemont—Thiers—Du Pin—Leo Allatius—Zaccagni—Cotelier—File-

[[]q] The Jesuits, Benedictines, Priests of the Oratory, and Jansenists.

SAC-VISCONTI-&c. [r]. This lift might be CENT. confiderably augmented by adding to it those writers among the laity who distinguished themfelves by their theological or literary productions.

SECT. II. PART L.

The doctrine of the church of Rome ilill mere corrupt than in the preced-

XXXIV. If we take an accurate view of the religious fystem of the Romish church during this century, both with respect to articles of faith and rules of practice, we shall find that, instead of being improved by being brought fomewhat nearer ing agos, to that perfect model of doctrine and morals that is exhibited to us in the Holy Scriptures, it had contracted new degrees of corruption and degeneracy in most places, partly by the negligence of the Roman pontifs, and partly by the dangerous maxims and influence of the Jefuits. This is not only the observation of those who have renounced the Romish communion, and in the defpotic ftyle of that church are called heretics; it is the complaint of the wifest and worthiest part of that communion, of all its members who have a zeal for the advancement of true Christian knowledge and genuine piety.

As to the doctrinal part of the Romish religion, it is faid, and not without foundation, to have fuffered extremely in the hands of the Jesuits, who, under the connivance, nay fometimes by the immediate affistance of the Roman pontifs, have perverted and corrupted fuch of the fundamental doctrines of Christianity as were left entire by the council of Trent. There are not wanting proofs fufficient to support this charge; inalmuch as these fubtile and infidious fathers have manifeftly endeavoured to diminish the authority and importance of the Holy Scriptures, have extolled the power of human nature, changed the fentiments of many with respect to the necessity and efficacy of divine grace, represented the mediation and fufferings of CHRIST as less powerful and meritorious than they are faid to be in the facred writings, turned the Roman pontiff into a terrestrial Deity, and put him almost upon an equal footing with the Divine Saviour; and, finally, rendered, as far as in them lies, the truth of the Christian religion dubious, by their fallacious reasonings, and their fubtile but pernicious fophistry. The testimonies brought to support these accusations by men of weight and merit, particularly among the Jansenists, are of very great authority, and it is extremely difficult to refuse our affent to them, when they are impartially examined; but, on the other hand, it may be eafily proved, that the Jefuits, instead of inventing these pernicious doctrines, did no more, in reality, than propagate them as they found them in that ancient form of the Romish religion that preceded the Reformation, and was directly calculated to raise the authority of the Pope, and the power and prerogatives of the Romish church to the very highest pitch of despotic grandeur. To inculcate this form of doctrine was the direct vocation of the Jesuits, who were to derive all their credit, opulence, and influence, from their being confidered as the main support of the papacy, and the peculiar favourites of the Roman pontifs. If the ultimate end and purpose of these pontiss were to render the church more pure and holy, and to bring it as near as possible to the resemblance of its Divine Founder, and if this were the commission they give to their favourite emissaries and doctors, then the Jesuits would be at liberty to preach a very different doctrine from what they now inculcate. But that liberty cannot be granted to them as long as their principal orders from the papal throne are, to use all their diligence and industry.

[[]r] For a particular account of the respective merit of the writers here mentioned, fee, among other literary historians, Du Pin's Histoire des Ecrivains Ecclesiastiques, tom. xvii. xviii. xix.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

SECT. II.

industry, to the end that the pontifs may hold CENT. what they have acquired, and recover what they have loft; and that the bishops and ministers of the Romish church may daily see their opulence increase, and the limits of their authority extended and enlarged. The chief crime then of the Jefuits is really this, that they have explained, with more openness and perspicuity, those points which the leading managers in the council of Trent had either entirely omitted, or flightly mentioned, that they might not shock the friends of true religion, who composed a part of that famous affembly. And here we see the true reafon why the Roman pontifs, notwithstanding the ardent folicitations and remonstrances that have been employed to arm their just severity against the Jesuits, have always maintained that artful Order, and have been fo deaf to the accufations of their adverfaries, that no entreaties have been able to perfuade them to condemn their religious principles and tenets, however erroneous in their nature, and pernicious in their effects. contrary, the court of Rome has always opposed, either in a public or clandestine manner, all the vigorous measures that have been used to procure the condemnation and suppression of the doctrine of the Loyolites; and the Roman pontifs have constantly treated all such attempts as the projects of rash and imprudent men, who, through involuntary ignorance or obstinate prejudice, were blind to the true interest of the church.

XXXV. In the sphere of morals, the Jesuits The foundations of made still more dreadful and atrocious inroads normany speed by speed by than in that of religion. Did we affirm, that they have perverted and corrupted almost all the various branches and precepts of morality, we should not express sufficiently the pernicious tendency of their maxims. Were we to go still further, and maintain, that they have fapped and deflroved

the Jeimis,

CENT. T. its very foundations, we should maintain no more Sect. II. than what innumerable writers of the Romish Part I. church abundantly testify, and what many of the most illustrious communities of that church publicly lament. Those who bring this dreadful charge against the sons of Lovola, have taken abundant precautions to vindicate themselves against the reproach of calumny in this matter. They have published several maxims, inconsistent with all regard for virtue and even decency, which they have drawn from the moral writings of that Order, and more especially from the numerous productions of its Casuists. They observe, more culcates the following maxims:

"That perfons truly wicked, and woid of the" love of God, may expect to obtain eternal life in particularly, that the whole fociety adopts and in-

"heaven, provided that they be impressed with a " fear of the Divine anger, and avoid all heinous and enormous crimes through the dread of future

" punishment:

"That those persons may transgress with safety, "who have a probable reason for transgressing, i. e. "any plausible argument or authority in favour of the fin they are inclined to commit [s]:

[2] This is one of the most corrupt and most dangerous maxims of the Jesuits. On the one hand, they have among them doctors of different characters and different principles, that thus they may render their fociety recommendable in the eyes of all forts of persons, the licentious as well as the austere. On the other, they maintain, that an opinion or practice, recommended by any one doctor, becomes thereby probable, as it is not to be supposed that a learned divine would adopt an opinion, or recommend a practice, in favour of which no confiderable reason could be alleged .- But here lies the poison: this probable opinion or practice may be followed, fay the Jefuits, even when the contrary is still more probable, nay, when it is fare, because, though the man err, he errs under the authority of an eminent doctor. Thus ESCOBAR affirms, that a judge may decide in favour of that fide of a question that is the least probable, and even against his own opinion, if he be supported by any tolerable authority. See Lettres Provinciales, Letter viii.

"That actions intrinsically evil, and directly CENT. XVII."
"contrary to the divine laws, may be innocently Sect. Sect. T.
"performed, by those who have so much power PARTI."
over their own minds, as to join, even ideally,
"a good end to this wicked action, or (to speak in

" a good end to this wicked action, or (to speak in the file of the Jesuits) who are capable of di" recting their attention aright [t].

"That philosophical fin is of a very light and "trivial nature, and does not deserve the pains of "hell:"—(By philosophical fin the Jesuits mean an action contrary to the dictates of nature and right reason, done by a person who is ignorant of the written law of God, or doubtful [u] of its true meaning.)

[1] For example, an ecclefiastic who buys a benefice, in order to direct his intention aright, must, by a powerful act of abstraction, turn away his thoughts from the crime of fimony, which he is committing, to fome lawful purpose, such as that of acquiring an ample fubliftence, or that of doing good by instructing the ignorant. Thus again, a man who runs his neighbour through the body in a duel, on account of a trivial affront, to render his action lawful, has only to turn his thoughts from the principle of vengeance to the more decent principle of honour; and the murder he commits will, by the magic power of Jefuitical morality, be converted into an innocent action. There is no crime, no enormity, to which this abominable maxim may not be extended. A famous Jefuit has declared, that a fon may wish for the death of his father, and even rejoice at it when it arrives, provided that his wish does not arife from any personal hatred, but only from a desire of the patrimony which this death will procure him. See GASPARD HUR-TADO, De sub. peccat. diff. 9. quoted by DIANA, p. 5. tr. 14. R. 99. and another has had the effrontery to maintain, that a monk or ecclefiaftic may lawfully affaffinate a calumniator, who threatens laying foundalous crimes to the charge of their community, when there is no other way of hindering him to execute his purpofe. See the works of Father L'Amy, tom. v. difp. 36. n. 118.

[u] It would be perhaps more accurate to define the philofolial fin of the Jesuis to be an assion contrary to right reason, which is done by a person who is either absolutely ignorant of God, or does not think of him during the time this assion is committed. CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

"That the transgressions committed by a per"fon blinded by the seduction of lust, agitated
"by the impulse of tumultuous passions, and des"titute of all sense and impression of religion,
"however detestable and heinous they may be
"in themselves, are not imputable to the trans"gressor before the tribunal of God; and that

"fuch transgressions may often be as involuntary as the actions of a madman:

"That the perfon who takes an oath, or enters into a contract, may, to elude the force of the one, and the obligation of the other, add to the form of words that express them, certain mental additions and tacit refervations."
These and other enormities of a like na-

These, and other enormities of a like nature [w], are said to make an effential part of the fystem

The books that have been written to expose and refute the corrupt and enormous maxims of the Jefuits, would make an ample library, were they collected together. But nothing of this kind is equal to the learned, ingenious and humorous work of the famous PASCAL, entitled, Le Provinciales, ou Lettres cerites par Louis de Montalte à un Provincial de ses amis et aux Jesuites sur la Morale et la Politique de ces Pères. This exquisite production is accompanied, in some editions of it, with the learned and judicious observations of NICOLE, who, under the fictitious name of GUILLAUME WENDEROCK, has fully demonstrated the truth of those facts which PASCAL had advanced, without quoting his authorities, and has placed in a full and flriking light, feveral interesting circumstances which that great man had treated with, perhaps, too much brevity. These Letters, which did the Jesuits more real mischief than either the indignation of fovereign princes, or any other calamity that had heretofore fallen upon their Order, were translated into Latin by RACHELIUS. On the other hand, the fons of Loyola, fensibly affected and alarmed by this formidable attack upon their reputation, left no means unemployed to defend themselves against such a respectable adversary. They fent forth their ablest champions to defend their cause, or at least to cover them from shame; among which champions the fubtle and eloquent Father DANIEL, the celebrated author of the Hiftory of France, shone forth with a superior luftre; and, as if they thought it unfafe to trust to the powers of argument and the force of evidence alone, they applied themfelves fystem of morality inculcated by the Jesuits. c ENT. And they were complained of, in the strongest XVII. remonstrances, PART I.

themselves for help to the secular arm, and had credit enough to obtain a fentence against the Provinciales, by which they were condemned to be burnt publicly at Paris. See Daniel's Opufeules, vol. i. p. 363. This author, however, acknowledges, that the greatest part of the answers which the Jesuits opposed to the performance of PASCAL were weak and unfatiffactory. Certain it is, that (whether it was owing to the ftrength of argument, or to the elegant wit and humour that reigned in them) the Provincial Letters loft not the finallet portion of their credit and reputation by all the answers that were made to them, but continued to pass through a variety of editions, which could fearcely be printed off with rapidity fusicient to fatisfy the defires of the public.

Another severe attack was made upon the Jesuits, in a book inferior to PASCAL's in point of wit and genteel pleafantry, but superior to it in point of evidence, since it abounds with paffages and teltimonies, which are drawn from the most applauded writings of the Jefuits, and demonstrate fully the corruption and enormity of the moral rules and maxims inculented by that famous Order. This book, which was published at Mons, in three volumes 8vo, in the year 1702, bears the following title: La Morale des Jesuites, extraite sidélement de leurs Livres, imprimée avec la permission et l'approbation des superieurs de leur Compagnie, par un Docteur de Sorbonne. The author was Perrault (fon of Charles Perrault, who began the famous controverly in France concerning the respective menit of the ancients and moderns), and his book met with the same sate with the Provincials of PASCAL; for it was burnt at Paris in the year 1670, at the request of the Jesuits. See the Opufeaks du P. DANIEL, tom. i. p. 356. Nor indeed is it at all furprifing, that the Jefaits exerted all their zeal against this compilation, which exhibited, in one shocking point of view, all that had been complained of and cenfured in their maxims and institutions, and unfolded the whole myftery of their iniquity.

It has been also laid to the charge of the Jesuits, that theyreduced their pernicious maxims to practice, especially in the remoter parts of the world. This the famous Apartula, together with some of his Jansenist brethren, have undertaken to prove, in that laborious and celebrated work, entitled, La Morale Pratique des Jesuites. In this important work, which consists of eight volumes in 8vo, and of which a second edition was published at Ansferdam in the year 1742, there is a multitude of authentic relations, documents, facts, and tellimonies, employed to demonstrate the criminal conduct and

VOL. V. practices

XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

CENT. remonstrances, not only by the Dominicans and Jansenists, but also by the most eminent theological doctors of Paris, Poitiers, Louvain, and other academical cities, who expressed their abhorrence of them in fuch a public and folemn manner, that the Roman pontif neither thought it fafe nor honourable to keep filence on that head. Accordingly a part of these moral maxims were condemned, in the year 1659, by pope ALEXANDER VII., in a public edict; and, in the year 1690, the article relating to philosophical fin met with the same sate, under the pontificate of ALEXANDER VIII. [x]. It was but natural to think, that, if the Order of Jesuits did not expire under the terrible blows it received from fuch a formidable lift of adverfaries, yet their fystem of morals must at least have been supressed and their pestilential maxims banished from the schools. This is the least that could have been expected from the complaints and remonftrances of the clerical and monastic Orders, and the damnatory bulls of the Roman pontifs. And yet, if we may credit the testimonies of > practices of the Jefuits. For an ample account of the jefuitical doctrine concerning Philosophical Sin, and the diffentions and controversies it occasioned, see JACOBI HYACINTHS SERRY * Addenda ad H. flor. Congregationum de Auxiliis, p. 82;

as also his Authorium, p. 289.

[m] There is a coucife and accurate account of the contests and divisions, to which the morality of the Jesuits gave rife in France and in other places, in a work, entitled, Catechifine Historique et Dogmatique six les Contestations qui divisent maintenent l'Echl., published in the year 1730, fee tom. ii. p. 26.—It is very remarkable, that the two papal bulls of Alex-ANDER VII. and VIII., against the Jesuits, are not to be found in the Bullarium Pontificum; but the Jansenists and Dominicans, who are careful in perpetuating whatever may tend to the dishonour of the Jesuits, have preserved them industriously from oblivion.

^{*} This is a fictitious name; the true name of the author of the Addenda is Augustin Le Blanc.

many learned and pious men in the communion C ENT. of Rome, even this effect was not produced; and sect. II. the remonstrances of the monks, the complaints PART I, of the clergy, and the bulls of the popes, rather ferved to reftrain, in a certain measure, the enormous licentiousness, that had reigned among the writers of this corrupt Order, than to purify the feminaries of instruction from the contagion of their diffolute maxims. - After what has been obferved in relation to the moral fystem of the lefuits, it will not be difficult to affign a reason for the remarkable propenfity that is discovered by kings, princes, the nobility, and gentry of both fexes, and an innumerable multitude of perfons of all ranks and conditions, to commit their confciences to the direction, and their fouls the care, of the brethren of this fociety. It is, no doubt, highly convenient for persons, who do not pretend to a rigid observance of the duties of religion and morality, to have spiritual guides, who diminish the guilt of transgression, disguise the deformity of vice, let loofe the reins to all the passions, nay, even nourish them by their diffolute precepts, and render the way to heaven as eafy, as agreeable, and smooth as is possible [y].

What has here been faid concerning the erroneous maxims and corrupt practices of the Jefuits must, however, be understood with certain modifications and restrictions. It must not be imagined, that these maxims are adopted, or these practices justified, by all the sons of Lovola, without exception, or that they are publicly taught and inculcated in all their schools and seminaries; for this, in reality, is not the case. As this Order has produced men of learning and genius, so neither has it been destitute of men of probity and candour; nor would it be a difficult talk to compile from the writings of the Jefuits a much more just and proper representation of the duties of religion and the obligations of morality, than that hideous and unfeemly exhibition of both, which PASCAL and his followers have drawn from the jefuitical Cafuifts, Summists, and Moralists. Those who centure the Jesuits in general, must, if their censures be well founded, have the following circumstances in view: First, That the rulers of that fociety not only fuffer feveral of their members to propagate publicly impious opinions and corrupt maxims, but even go fo far as to fet the feal of their approbation to the books in which these opinions and maxims are contained [z]: Secondly, That the fystem of religion and morality that is taught in the greatest part of their feminaries is so loose, vague, and ill-digested, that it not only may be easily perverted to bad purpofes and erreneous conclusions, but even feems peculiarly fusceptible of fuch abuse: and lastly, that the select sew, who are initiated into the grand mysteries of the fociety, and fet apart to transact its affairs, to carry on its projects, to exert their political talents in the closet of the minifter, or in the cabinet of the prince, commonly make use of the dangerous and pernicious maxims that are complained of, to augment the authority and opulence of their Order. The candor and impartiality that become an historian oblige us to acknowledge, at the fame time, that, in demonftrating the turpitude and enormity of certain maxims and opinions of the lefuits, their adverfaries have gone too far, and permitted their eloquence and zeal to run into exaggeration. This

⁽r, q) The translator has here inserted into the text the note [q] of the original.

C E N T. XVII. SECT. H. PART I.

^[2] This is no doubt true. The Jefuits, as has been observed above, note [3], have doctors of all forts and fizes; and this, indeed, is necessary, in order to the establishment of that universal empire at which they aim. See Lettres Prominiality, let. v. p. 62. dixieme edit. de Cologne, 1689.

Sпст. II.

we might shew, with the fullest evidence, by ex- c ENT. amples deduced from the doctrines of probability and mental reservation, and the imputations that PART I. have been made to the Jesuits on these heads; but this would lead us too far from the thread of our history. We shall only observe, that what happens frequently in every kind of controversy, happened here in a fingular manner; I mean, that the Jefuits were charged with tenets, which had been drawn confequentially from their doctrine, by their accusers, without their confent; -that their phrases and terms were not always interpreted according to the precise meaning they annexed to them; -and that the tendency of their fystem was represented in too partial and unequitable a light.

XXXVI. The Holy Scriptures did not acquire The flate of any new degrees of public respect and authority theology, or under the pontifs of this century. It can be the progress proved, on the contrary, by the most authentic interpretarecords, that the votaries of Rome, and more position of especially the Jesuits, employed all their dexterity and art, either to prevent the word of God from falling into the hands of the people, or at least to have it explained in a manner confistent with the interest, grandeur, and pretensions of the church. In France and in the Low Countries there arose, indeed, several commentators and critics, who were very far from being destitute of knowledge and erudition; but it may nevertheless be said concerning them, that, instead of illustrating and explaining the divine oracles, they rendered them more obscure, by blending their own crude inventions with the dictates of celestial wifdom. This is chargeable even upon the Janfenists, who, though superior to the other Romaneatholic expositors in most respects, yet fell into that abfurd method of disfiguring the pure word of God, by far-fetched allusions, mystic interpretations.

Exegetic made in the tion and exforipture.

Q 3

CENT pretations, and frigid allegories, compiled from SECT. II. the reveries of the ancient fathers [a]. Here, PART I. nevertheless, an exception is to be made in favour of PASQUIER QUENEL, a priest of the oratory, whose edition of the New Testament, accompanied with pious meditations and remarks, made fuch a prodigious noise in the theological world [3], and even in our time has continued to furnish matter of warm and violent contest, and to iplit the Roman catholic doctors into parties and factions $\lceil \epsilon \rceil$.

Of Didactic, Metal, and Folemic Theology.

XXXVII. The greatest part of the public schools retained that dry, intricate, and captious method of teaching theology, that had prevailed in the ages of barbarifm and darkness, and was

[a] The reader will find a striking example of this in the well-known Bible of ISAAC LE MAITRE, commonly called SACY, which contains all the crude and extravagant fancies and allegories, with which the ancient doctors obscured the beautiful fimplicity of the Holy Scriptures, and rendered their clearest expressions intricate and mysterious.

[6] That is, in the Roman-catholic part of the theological world. Never perhaps did any thing fhew, in a more fighting manner, the blind zeal of faction than the hard treatment this book met with. RENAUDOT, a very learned French abbot, who refided fome time at Rome during the pontificate of CLEMENT XI., went one day to visit that pontif, who was a patron of learned men, and found him reading QUENEL's Bible. On the abbot's entering the chamber, the pope accoffed him thus: Here is an edmirable book! We have nobody at Prome capable of writing in this manner. I would be glad if I could engage the cathor of it to refide here.—The very fame pope that pronounced this encomium on Quener's book, condemned it publicly afterwards, and employed all his authority to fuppress it. See Voltaire, Siécle de Louis XIV., vol. ii. p. 293. Edit. de Drefde, 1753.

[c] The first part of this work, which contains Observations on the four Golpels, was published in the year 1671; and as it was received with univerfal applaufe, this encouraged the author, not only to revife and augment it, but also to enlarge his plan, and compole Offervations on the other books of the New Teltament. See Care's fine Historique fur les Contestations de l'Eglif, tom. ii. p. 150.—Ch. Eberh. Weismanne

Hiftor, Leel f. Swc. xvii. p. 588.

adapted

adapted to difgust all such as were endowed with CENT. a liberal turn of mind. There was no possibility SECT. II. of ordering matters fo, as that Didactic or Biblical theology, which is supposed to arrange and illustrate the truths of religion by the dictates of Holy Scripture, should be placed upon the same footing, and held in the same honour, with schola-Ric divinity, which had its fource in the metaphyfical visions of the peripatetic philosophy. Even the edicts of the pontifs were infufficient to bring this about. In the greatest part of the universities, the scholastic doctors domineered, and were constantly molesting and insulting the Biblical divines, who, generally speaking, were little fkilled in the captious arts of fophiftry and dialectical chicane. It is nevertheless to be observed, that many of the French doctors, and more especially the Jansenists, explained the principal doctrines and duties of Christianity in a style and manner that were at least recommendable on account of their elegance and perspicuity; and indeed it may be affirmed, that almost all the theological or moral treatifes of this age, that were composed with any tolerable degree of fimplicity and good fenfe, had the doctors of Port-Royal or the French priests of the oratory, for their authors. We have already taken notice of the changes that were introduced, during this century, into the method of carrying on theological controverly. The German, Belgic, and French divines, being at length convinced, by a difagreeable experience, that their captious, incoherent, and uncharitable manner of disputing, exasperated those who differed from them in their religious fentiments, and confirmed them in their respective systems, instead of converting them; and perceiving, moreover, that the arguments in which they had formerly placed their principal confidence, proved feeble and infufficient to make the

SECT. II. PART I.

The contells that arofe under the pontin-care of thement VIII. fefurts and Dominicana concerning the Divine Grace.

CENT. the least impression, found it necessary to look out for new and more specious methods of attack and defence.

XXXVIII. The Romish church has, notwithstanding its boasted uniformity of doctrine, been always divided by a multitude of controverfies. It would be endless to enumerate the between the disputes that have arisen between the seminaries of learning, and the contests that have divided the monastic Orders. The greatest part of these, as being of little moment, we shall pass over in filence; for they have been treated with indifference and neglect by the popes, who never took notice of them but when they grew violent and noify, and then suppressed them with an imperious nod, that imposed filence upon the contending parties. Besides, these less momentous controverfies, which it will never be impossible entirely to extinguish, are not of fuch a nature as to affect the church in its fundamental principles, to endanger its constitution, or to hurt its interests. It will, therefore, be fufficient to give a brief account of those debates, that, by their superior importance and their various connections and dependencies, may be faid to have affected the church in general, and to have threatened it with alarming changes and revolutions.

And here the arft place is naturally due to those famous debates that were carried on between the Holists and Dominicans, concerning the nature and necessity of Divine Grace; the decision of which important point lead, towards the conclusion of the preceding century, been committed by CLE-MENT VIII. to a felect affembly of learned divines. These arbiters, after having employed several years in deliberating upon this nice and critical fubject, and in examining the arguments of the contending parties, intimated, plainly enough, to the pontif, that the fentiments of the Dominicans,

nicans, concerning Grace, Predestination, Human C EN T. Liberty, and Original Sin, were more conformable SECT. II. to the doctrine of scripture and the decisions of PARIL the ancient fathers than the opinions of MOLINA, which were patronifed by the Jesuits. They obferved, more especially, that the former leaned towards the tenets of Augustine; while the latter bore a striking resemblance of the Pelagian herefy. In confequence of this declaration, CLE-MENT feemed resolved to pass condemnation on the Jesuits, and to determine the controversy in favour of the Dominicans. Things were in this state in the year 1601, when the Jesuits, alarmed at the dangers that threatened them, befet the old pontif night and day, and fo importuned him with entreaties, menaces, arguments, and complaints, that, in the year 1602, he consented to re-examine this intricate controversy, and undertook himself the critical task of principal arbitrator therein. For this purpose, he chose a council $\lceil d \rceil$ (composed of fifteen cardinals, nine professors of divinity, and five bishops), which, during the fpace of three years [e], affembled feventy-eight times, or, to fpeak in the style of Rome, held fo many congregations. At these meetings, the pontif heard, at one time, the Jesuits and Dominicans disputing in favour of their respective fystems; and ordered, at another, the assembled doctors to weigh their reasons, and examine the proofs that were offered on both fides of this difficult question. The result of this examination is not known with any degree of certainty; fince the death of CLEMENT, which happened on the fourth day of March, in the year 1005, prevented his pronouncing a decifive fentence. The Bo-

^{[] [}d] This council was called the Congregation do Max-

[[]e] From the 20th of March 1602, to the 22d of January 1605. minicons

PART I.

CENT. minicans affure us, that the pope, had he lived. XVII. Sect. II. would have condemned Molina. The Jefuits, on the contrary, maintain, that he would have acquitted him publicly from all charge of herefy and error. They alone, who have feen the records of this council, and the journal of its proceedings, are qualified to determine which of the two we are to believe; but these records are kept with the utmost fecrecy at Rome.

Continuation of this controverfy under Paul V. and its uluc.

XXXIX. The proceedings of the congregation that had been affembled by CLEMENT were fufpended, for fome time, by the death of that pontif; but they were refumed, in the year 1605, by the order of PAUL V., his fuccessor. Their deliberations, which were continued from the month of September, till the month of March in the following year, did not turn fo much upon the merits of the cause, which were already sufficiently examined, as upon the prudent and proper method of finishing the contest. The great question now was, whether the well-being of the church would admit of the decision of this controverfy by a papal bull? and, if fuch a decision was found adviseable, it still remained to be considered, in what terms the bull should be drawn up. All these long and solemn deliberations refembled the delivery of the mountain in the fable, and ended in this resolution, that the whole controversy, instead of being decided, should be supprefled; and that each of the contending parties should have the liberty of following their respective opinions. The Dominicans affert, that the two pontifs, together with the congregation of divines that they employed in the review of this important controverly, were entirely perfuaded of the justice of their cause, and of the truth of their fystem; they moreover observe, that PAUL V. had expressly ordered a folemn condemnation of the doctrine of the Jesuits to be drawn up; but was prevented prevented from finishing and publishing it to the CENT. world, by the unhappy war that was kindled about Sect. II. that time between him and the Venetians. The Jefuits, on the other hand, represent these accounts of the Dominicans as entirely fictitious, and affirm that neither the pontif, nor the more judicious and respectable members of the congregation, found any thing in the fentiments of Molina that was worthy of cenfure, or flood in much need of correction. In a point which is rendered thus uncertain by contradictory testimonies and affertions, it is difficult to determine what we are to believe: it however appears extremely proba-ble, that, whatever the private opinion of PAUL V. may have been, he was prevented from pronouncing a public determination of this famous controverly, by his apprehensions of offending either the king of France, who protected the lefuits, or the king of Spain, who warmly maintained the cause of the Dominicans. It is farther probable, nay almost certain, that, had the pontif been independent on all foreign influence, and at full liberty to decide this knotty point, he would have pronounced one of those ambiguous fentences, for which the oracle of Rome is fo famous, and would have fo conducted matters as to fhock neither of the contending parties $\lceil f \rceil$.

PART L

[f] Befides the authors we have above recommended as proper to be confulted in relation to their contests, fee Lz CLERC, Alemoires pour fervir à l'Histoire des controverses dans P.Eglife Remaine far la Fredeflination et fur la Grace, in his Dibbathque Univerfells et Eiffor que, tonn. Xiv. p. 235.—The conduct, both of the Jefuits and Dominicans, after their controverfy was hushed in filence, assords much reason to prefame, that they had been both forcely exhorted by the Roman poatif to mitigate fomewhat their respective systems, and so to modify their doctrines or expretitions, as to avoid the reproaches of herefy that had been call upon them; for the Jefuits had been accused of Pelagianism, and the Dominicans of a propenfity to the tenets of the Protestant churches. This CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART I. XL. The flame of controverfy, which feemed thus extinguished, or at least covered, broke out again appears, in a more particular manner, from a letter written by CLAUDIUS AQUAVIVA, general of the Jesuits, in the year 1613, and addressed to all the members of his Order. In this letter the prudent general modifies with great dexterity and caution the fentiments of MOLINA, and enjoins it upon the brethren of the fociety to teach every where the doctrine which reprefents the Supreme Being, as electing, freely, to eternal life, without any regard had to their merits, those whom he has been pleased to render partakers of that inclimable bleffing; but, at the fame time, he exhorts them to inculeate this doctrine in fuch a manner, as not to give up the tenets, relating to Divine Grace, which they had maintained in their controverly with the Dominicans. Never, furely, was fuch a contradictory exhortation or order heard of; the good general thought, neverthelefs, that he could reconcile abundantly thefe contradictions, by that branch of the divine knowledge which is called, by the schoolmen, sciencia media. See the Catéchisme Historique sur les diffentions de l'Eglije, tom. i. p. 207.

The rife of Jansensson, and the contests it produced.

On the other hand, the Dominicans, although their fentiments remain the fame that they were before the commencement of this controversy, have learned, notwithstanding, to cast a kind of ambiguity and obscurity over their theological system, by using certain terms and expressions, that are manifestly borrowed from the schools of the Jesuits; and this they do to prevent the latter from reproaching them with a propenfity to the doctrine of CALVIN. They are, moreover, much less remarkable, than formerly, for their zealous opposition to the Jesuits, which may be owing, perhaps, to prudent reflections on the dangers they have been involved in by this opposition, and the fruitless pains and labour it has cost them. The Jansenists reproach them feverely with this change of conduct, and confider it as a manifest and notorious apostaly from divine truth. See the Lettres Provinciales of PASCAL, lettr. ii. p. 27. Edit. de Cologne, &c. 1689 .- We are not, however, to conclude, from this change of Ryle and external conduct among the Dominicans, that they are reconciled to the Jefuits, and that there remain no traces of their ancient opposition to that perfidious Order. By no means; for befides that, many of them are shocked at the excessive timidity and prudence of a great part of their brethren, the whole body retains Itill fome hidden fparks of the indignation with which they formerly beheld the Jesuits; and, when a convenient occasion of discovering this indignation is offered, they do not let it pass unimproved. The Tanlenifis are here embarked in the faine coule with the

again with new violence, in the year 1640, and CENT. formed a kind of schism in the church of Rome, SECT. II. which involved it in great perplexity, and proved PART I, highly detrimental to it in various respects. The occasion of these new troubles was the publication of a book, intitled, Augustinus, composed by Cornelius Jansenius, bishop of Tpres, and published after the death of the author [g]. In this book, which even the Jesuits acknowledge to be the production of a man of learning and piety, the doctrine of Augustine, concerning man's natural corruption, and the nature and efficacy of that Divine Grace, which alone can efface this unhappy stain, is unfolded at large, and illustrated, for the most part, in Augustine's own words. For the end, which Jansenius proposed to himself in this Dominicans; fince the fentiments of St. Thomas, concerning Diwine Grace, differ but very little from those of St. Augustine. Cardinal Henry Noris, the most eminently learned among the followers of the latter, expresses is concern, that he is not at liberty to publish what passed in favour of Augustine, and to the disadvantage of Molina and the Jesuits, in the famous Congregation de Auxiliis, so often assembled by the Popes Clement VIII. and Paul V.; see his Vindiciae Augustinianae, cap. vi. p. 1175. tom. i. opp.—Quando, says he, recentiori Romano decreto id vetitum oft, cum dispendio cause, quam defendo, necessariam defensionem omitto.

[g] For an account of this famous man, fee BAYLE'S Dictionary, tom. ii. at the article JANSENIUS.—LEYDECKER, Devita et morte JANSENIU, lib. iii. which makes the first part of his History of Jansenism, published at Utrecht in 8vo in the year 1695.—Didionaire des Livres Jansenistes, tom. i. p. 120.—This celebrated work of JANSENIUS, which gave such a wound to the Romish church, as neither the power nor wisdom of its pontifs will ever be able to heal, is divided into three parts. The first is historical, and contains a relation of the Pelagian controvers, which arose in the fifth century. In the second, we find an accurate account and illustration of the doctrine of Augustine, relating to the Constitution and powers of the Human Nature, in its original, fallen, and renewed state. The third contains the doctrine of the same great man, relating to the Adids of fandistying Grace procured by Christ, and to the eternal Predesimation of men and angels. The style of JANSENIUS is clear, but not sufficiently correct.

work,

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

work, was not to give his own private fentiments concerning these important points, but to shew in what manner they had been understood and explained by that celebrated father of the church, now mentioned, whose name and authority were univerfally revered in all parts of the Romancatholic world [b]. No incident could be more unfavourable to the cause of the Jesuits, and the progress of their religious system, than the publication of this book; for as the doctrine of Au-GUSTINE differed but very little from that of the Dominicans [i]; as it was held facred, nay almost respected as divine, in the church of Rome, on account of the extraordinary merit and authority of that illustrious bishop, and, at the same time, was almost diametrically opposite to the fentiments generally received among the Jesuits; these latter could scarcely consider the book of JANSENIUS in any other light than as a tacit, but formidable, refutation of their opinions concerning Human Liberty and Divine Grace. And, accordingly, they not only drew their pens against this famous book, but also used their most zealous rendeavours to obtain a public condemnation of it from Rome. Their endeavours were not unfuccefsful. The Roman inquisitors began the opposition by prohibiting the perusal of it, in the year 1641; and the year following, URBAN VIII. condemned it by a folemn bull, as infected with feveral errors, that had been long banished from CENT. the church.

[i] The Dominicans followed the fentiments of THOMAS AQUINAS, concerning the nature and efficacy of Divine

Grace.

[[]h] Thus Jansenius expresses himself in his Augustinus, tom. ii. Lib. Proæmial. cap. xxix. p. 65.—Non ego hic de aliqua nova sententia reperienda disputo... s.d. de antiqua Augustini.—Queritar, non quid de natura humane statibus et viribus, vel de Dei gratia et predessimatione sentiendum est, sed quid Augustinus olim coelessa nomine et applicusu tradiderit, pradicaverit, scriptoque multiplicuer consignaverit.

XVII. SECT. II.

XLI. There were nevertheless places, even PART I. within the bounds of the Romish church, where neither the decisions of the inquisitor, nor the bull of the pontif, were in the least respected. The doctors of Louvain in particular, and the followers of Augustine in general, who were very numerous in the Netherlands, opposed, with the utmost vigour, the proceedings of the Jesuits, and the condemnation of Jansenius; and hence arose a warm contest, which proved a source of much trouble to the Belgic provinces. But it was not confined within fuch narrow limits; it reached the neighbouring countries, and broke out, with peculiar vehemence, in France, where the abbot of St. Cyran [k], a man of an elegant genius, and equally diftinguished by the extent of his learning, the luftre of his piety, and the fanctity of his manners, had procured Augustine many zealous followers, and the Jesuits as many bitter and implacable adversaries [1]. This respectable abbot

[k] The name of this abbot was JEAN DU VERGER DE HAURANE.

[/] This illustrious abbot is confidered by the Janferists as equal in merit and authority to Jansenius himself, whom he is supposed to have affisted in composing his Augustinus. The French, more especially (I mean such of them as adopt the doctrine of Augustine), revere him as an oracle, and even extel him beyond JANSENIUS. For an account of the life and transactions of this pious abbot, see LANCELOT's Memoires touchant la vie de M. de S. Cyran, which were published at Cologn *, in the year 1738, in two volumes 8vo. - Add to thefe Recueil de plusieurs pières pour sirvir à l'Histoire de Port-Royal, p. 1,-150.-ARNAUD D'ANDILLY, Memoires au sujet de l'Albé de S. Cyran, which are published in the first volume of his Vies des Religieuses de Port-Royal, p. 15-44.-BAYLE'S Dictionary, vol. ii. at the article JANSENIUS, - Dictionaire des abbot was the intimate friend and relation of JAN-SENIUS, and one of the most strenuous defenders of his doctrine. On the other hand, the far greatest part of the French theologists appeared on the fide of the Jesuits, whose religious tenets feemed more honourable to human nature, or at least more agreeable to its propensities, more suitable to the genius of the Romish religion, and more adapted to promote and advance the interests of the Romish church, than the doctrine of Augustin. The party of Jansenius had also its patrons; and they were fuch as reflected honour on the cause. In this respectable list we may reckon feveral bishops eminent for their piety, and fome of the first and most elegant geniuses of the French nation, fuch as ARNAUD, NICOLE, PAS-CAL, and QUENEL, and the other famous and learned men, who are known under the denomination of the Authors of Port-Royal. This party was also confiderably augmented by a multitude of persons, who looked upon the usual practice of piety in the Romish church (which consists in the frequent use of the Sacraments, the confession of fins, and the performance of certain external acts of religion) as much inferior to what the Gospel of CHRIST requires, and who confidered Christian piety as the vital and internal principle of a foul, in which true faith and divine love have gained a happy ascendant. Thus one of the contending parties excelled in the number and power of its . votaries; the other in the learning, genius, and piety of its adherents; and, things being thus balanced, it is not difficult to comprehend, how a controverfy, which began about a century ago,

^{*} Though they are faid, in the title-page, to have been printed at Cologn; yet it is prefumed, on good grounds, that they first saw the light at Utrecht.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II.

Livres Janfenifies, tom. i. p. 133.—For an account of the earlier studies of the abbot in question, see Gabriel Liron, Singularités Hyloriques et Litteraires, tom. iv. p. 507.

fhould be still carried on with the most vehement CENT. contention and ardour $\lceil m \rceil$.

SECT. II. PART I.

XLII. Those who have taken an attentive view of this long, and indeed endless controversy, can- The menot but think it a matter both of curiofity and thods and amusement to observe the contrivances, strata-employed gems, arguments, and arts employed by both parties in Jesuits and Jansenists; by the former in their me- this controthods of attack, and by the latter in their plans of defence. The Jesuits came forth into the field of controversy, armed with sophistical arguments, odious comparisons, papal bulls, royal edicts, and the protection of a great part of the nobility and bishops; and, as if all this had appeared to them infufficient, they had recourse to still more formidable auxiliaries, even the fecular arm, and a competent number of dragoons. The Jansenists, far from being dismayed at the view of this warlike hoft, stood their ground with steadiness and intrepidity. They evaded the mortal

[m] The history of this contest is to be found in many authors, who have either given a relation of the whole, or treated apart some of its most interesting branches. The writers that ought to be principally confulted on this fubject are those which follow: GERBERON, Histoire Générale du Jansénisme, published in 1700, at Amsterdam, in three volumes 8vo, and republished in five volumes 12mo, at Lyons, in 1708.—Du Mas, Histoire des Cinq Propositions de Jansenius, printed at Liege in 8vo in 1694. Of these two writers, the former maintains the cause of the Jansenits, while the latter savours that of the Jefuits .- Add to these, Melcs. Leydecker's Historia Jansenismi, printed at Utreebt in 8vc in 1695; and Voltaire's Siècle de Louis XIV. tom. ii. p. 264. Several books, written on both fides, are enumerated in a work published in 8vo in 1735, under the following title: Bibliotheque Farseniste, ou Catalogue Alphabetique des principaux Livres Jansenistes, the author of which is faid to be Domin. Colonia, a learned Jefuit. This book, as we have had before occasion to observe, has been republished at Antwerp, with confiderable additions, in four volumes 8vo, under the title of, Dictionaire des Livres Jansenistes .- See Recueil des pieces pour servir à l'Histoire de Port-Royal, p. 325.

P

C E N T. XVII. SECT. II. PART I. blows that were levelled at them in the royal and papal mandates, by the help of nice interpretations, fubtile distinctions, nay, by the very same fophistical refinements which they blamed in the Jesuits. To the threatenings and frowns of the nobles and bishous, who protected their adverfaries, they opposed the favour and applause of the people; to fophisms they opposed fophisms, and invectives to invectives; and to human power they opposed the Divine Omnipotence, and boafted of the miracles by which heaven had declared itself in their favour. When they perceived that the strongest arguments and the most respectable authorities were insufficient to conquer the obstinacy of their adversaries, they endeavoured, by their religious exploits, and their application to the advancement of piety and learning, to obtain the favour of the pontifs, and strengthen their interest with the people. Hence they declared war against the enemies of the Romish church; formed new stratagems to ensnare and ruin the Protestants; took extraordinary pains in instructing the youth in all the liberal arts and sciences; drew up a variety of useful, accurate, and elegant abridgments, containing the elements of philosophy and the learned languages; published a multitude of treatises on practical religion and morality, whose perfuasive eloquence charmed all ranks and orders of men; introduced and cultivated an eafy, correct, and agreeable manner of writing; and gave accurate and learned interpretations of feveral ancient authors. To all these various kinds of merit, the greatest part of which were real and folid, they added others that were at least visionary and chimerical; for they endeavoured to perfuade, and did, in effect, perfuade many, that the Supreme Being interposed particularly in support of their cause, and, by prodigies and miracles of a stupendous pendous kind, confirmed the truth of the doctrine CENT. of Augustine, in a manner adapted to remove Sect. II. all doubt, and triumph over all opposition $\lceil n \rceil$.

[n] It is well known that the Jansenists, or Augustinians, have long pretended to confirm their doctrine by miracles; and they even acknowledge, that these miracles have sometimes faved them, when their affairs have been reduced to a desperate fituation. See Memoires de Port Royal, tom. i. p. 256. tom. ii. p. 107.—The first time we hear mention made of these miracles is in 1656, and the following years, when a pretended thorn of that derifive crown that was put upon our Saviour's head by the Roman foldiers, is reported to have performed feveral marvellous cures in the convent of Port-Royal. See the Recueil de pluficurs pieces pour fervir à l'Histoire de Port-Royal, p. 228. 448 .- FONTAINE, Memoires pour servir à l'Histoire de Port-Royal, tom. ii. p. 131.-These were followed by other prodigies in the year 1661.- Ties des Religieuses de Port-Royal, tom. i. p. 192. and in the year 1664, Memoires de Port-Royal, tom. iii. p. 252.—The fame of these miracles was very great during the last century, and proved fingularly advantageous to the cause of the Jansenists; but they are now fallen, even in France, into oblivion and diferedit. The Janfenifts, therefore, of the prefent age, being pressed by their adversaries, were obliged to have recourse to new prodigies, as the credit of the old ones was entirely worn out; and they feemed, indeed, to have had miracles at command, by the confiderable number they pretended to perform. Thus (if we are credulous enough to believe their reports) in the year 1725, a woman, whose name was LE Fosse, was fuddenly cured of a bloody flux, by imploring the aid of the Hoft, when it was, one day, carried by a Jansenist priest. About two years after this, we are told, that the tomb of GER-HARD ROUSSE, a canon of Avignon, was honoured with miracles of a flupendous kind; and, finally, we are informed, that the fame honour was conferred, in the year 1731, on the bones of the Abbé DE PARIS, which were interred at St. Aledard, where innumerable miracles are faid to have been wrought. This last story has given rife to the warmest contests, between the superstitious or crasty Jansenists and their adverfaries in all communions. Befides all this, QUESNELL, LEvier, Desangins, and Tournus, the great ornaments of Janfenism, are faid to have furnished extraordinary succours, on feveral occasions, to fick and infirm perfons, who tellified a lively confidence in their prayers and merits. See a famous Janfenist book composed in answer to the Bull Univenitus, and entitled, Jefus Christ Sous P Anathéme et Sous P Excommunication,

S в ст. II.

C E N T. All this rendered the Jansenists extremely popular, and held the victory of the Jesuits for some PART I. time dubious; nay, it is more than probable, that the former would have triumphed, had not the cause of the latter been the cause of the papacy, and had not the flability and grandeur of the Romish church depended, in a great measure, upon the fuccess of their religious maxims.

Five propotitions of lanfenius condenned by Innocent X.

XLIII. It appears, from feveral circumstances, that URBAN VIII., and, after him, INNOCENT X., were really bent on appearing these dangerous tumults, in the fame manner as the popes in former times had prudently suppressed the controversies excited by BAIUS and the Dominicans. But the vivacity, inconftancy, and restless spirit of the French doctors threw all into confusion, and disconcerted the measures of the pontifs. The art. xvii. p. 61. xviii. p. 66. Edit. Utrecht .- There is no doubt, but a great part of the Jansenists defend these miracles from principle, and in confequence of a perfuation of their truth and reality; for that party abounds with persons, whose piety is blended with a most superstitious credulity, who look upon their religious fystem as celestial truth, and their cause as the immediate cause of heaven, and who are consequently dispesed to think that it cannot possibly be neglected by the Deity, or left without extraordinary marks of his approbation and supporting presence. It is however amazing, nay almost incredible, on the other hand, that the more judicious defenders of this cause, those eminent Jansenists, whose sagacity, learning, and good fense, discover themselves so abundantly in other matters, do not confider that the powers of nature, the efficacy of proper remedics, or the efforts of imagination, produce many important changes and effects, which imposture, or a blind attachment to fome particular cause, lead many to attribute to the miraculous interpolition of the Deity. We can eafily account for the delutions of weak enthuliafts, or the tricks of egregious impostors; but when we see men of piety and judgment appearing in defence of fuch miracles as those now under confideration, we must conclude, that they look upon fraud as lawful in the fupport of a good caufe, and make no fcruple of deceiving the people, when they propose, by this delufion, to confirm and propagate what they take to be the truth.

oppofers of the doctrine of Augustine felected CENT. five propositions out of the work of Jansenius al- Sect. II. ready mentioned, which appeared to them the most erroneous in their nature, and the most pernicious in their tendency; and, being fet on by the infligation, and feconded by the influence of the Jesuits, employed their most zealous endeayours and their most importunate intreaties, at the court of Rome, to have these propositions condemned. On the other hand, a great part of the Gallican clergy used their utmost efforts to prevent this condemnation; and, for that purpose, they fent deputies to Rome, to entreat INNOCENT X. to fuspend his final decision until the true sense of these propositions was deliberately examined, fince the ambiguity of style, in which they were expressed, rendered them susceptible of a false interpretation. But these entreaties were ineffectual: the interest and importunities of the Jesuits prevailed; and the pontif, without examining the merits of the cause with a suitable degree of impartiality and attention, condemned, by a public bull, on the 31st of May, 1653, the propositions of JANSENIUS. These propositions contained the following doctrines:

1. That there are divine precepts, which good men, notwithstanding their desire to observe them, are, nevertheless, absolutely unable to obey; nor has God given them that measure of grace, that is essentially necessary to render them capable of such obedience:

2. That no person, in this corrupt state of nature, can resist the influence of divine grace, when it operates the state of the state o rates upon the mind:

3. That, in order to render human actions meritorious, it is not requisite that they be exempt from NECESSITY, but only that they be free from CONSTRAINT [0].

4. That

[0] Augustine, Leibnitz, and a confiderable number of modern philosophers, who maintain the doctrine of Ne-P 3 CESSITY, CENT, SFCT. II.

4. That the Semi-pelagians err grievously in maintaining, that the human will is endowed with the PART I. power of either receiving or refifting the aids and influences of preventing grace:

> 5. That whofoever affirms, that Jefus Christ made expiation, by his fufferings and death, for the fins of all mankind, is a Semi-pelagian.

Of these propositions the pontif declared the first four only beretical; but he pronounced the fifth raft, impious, and injurious to the Supreme

Being [p].

Alexander VII. publiffics a bull against lanfanius.

XLIV. This fentence of the fupreme ecclefiaftical judge was indeed painful to the Jansenists, and of confequence highly agreeable to their adversaries. It did not however either drive the former to despair, or fatisfy the latter to the extent of their defires; for while the doctrine was condemned, the man escaped. JANSENIUS was not named in the bull, nor did the pontif even declare that the five propositions were maintained in the book entitled Augustinus, in the fense in which he had condemned them. Hence the difciples of Augustine and Jansenius defended themselves by a distinction invented by the ingenious and fubtile Anthony Arnaud, in confequence of which they confidered feparately in this controverfy the matter of doctrine and the matter of fact; that is to fay, they acknowledged themselves bound to believe, that the five propositions abovementioned were justly condemned by the CESSITY, confider this necessity in moral actions, as confident with true liberty, because it is consistent with spontaneity and choice. According to them, constraint alone and external force destroy merit and imputation.

[f] This Bull is fill extant in the Bullereum Romanum, tom. vi. p. 456. It has also been published, together with feveral other pieces relating to this controverfy, by Du PLrs-SIS D'ARGENTRE, in his Collectio judiciorum de novis erroribus, tem. iii. p. ii. p. 261.

Roman pontif [q]; but they maintained, that CENT. the pope had not declared, and confequently that SICT. II. they were not bound to believe, that thefe propo- PART I. fitions were to be found in [ANSENIUS'S book, in the fense in which they had been condemned [r]. They did not however enjoy long the benefit of this artful distinction. The restless and invincible hatred of their enemies purfued them in every quarter where they looked for protection or repose; and at length engaged ALEXANDER VII., the fuccessor of Innocent, to declare, by a folemn bull, issued out in the year 1656, that the five propositions, that had been condemned, were the tenets of JANSENIUS, and were contained in his book. The pontif did not stop here; but to this flagrant instance of imprudence added another still more shocking; for, in the year 1665, he fent into France the form of a declaration, that was to be fubicribed by all those who aspired after any preferment in the church, and in which it was affirmed, that the five propositions were to be found in the book of JANSENIUS, in the fame fenfe in which they had been condemned by the church [s]. This declaration, whose unexampled temerity and contentious tendency appeared in the most odious colours, not only to the Jansenists, but also to the wifer part of the French nation, produced the most deplorable divisions and tumults. It was immediately opposed with vigour by the Jansenists, who maintained, that in matters of fact the pope was fallible, especially when his decisions were merely personal, and not confirm-

[[]s] This was what our author calls the question de jure.

[r] This is the question de factor.

[s] This Bull, together with several other pieces, is also published by Du Plessis D'Argentre, in his Collectio judiciosum de novis erroribus, tom. iii. p. 281. 288. 306.—See the form of Alexander's declaration, with the Mandate of Lewis XIV. ibid. p. 314.

SECT. II.

CENT. ed by a general council; and, of consequence, that it was neither obligatory nor necessary to fubfcribe this papal declaration, which had only a matter of fact for its object. The Jesuits, on the contrary, audaciously afferted, even openly, in the city of Paris, and in the face of the Gallican church, that faith and confidence in the papal decisions relating to matter of fact, had no less the characters of a well-grounded and divine faith, than when these decisions related merely to matters of doctrine and opinion. It is to be remarked, on the other hand, that all the Jansenists were by no means fo refolute and intrepid as those abovementioned. Some of them declared, that they would neither subscribe nor reject the Form in question, but shew their veneration for the authority of the pope, by observing a profound silence on that subject. Others professed themfelves ready to subscribe it, not indeed without exception and referve, but on condition of being allowed to explain, either verbally or in writing, the fense in which they understood it, or the diftinctions and limitations with which they were willing to adopt it. Others employed a variety of methods and stratagems to elude the force of this tyrannical declaration $\lceil t \rceil$. But nothing of this kind was fufficient to fatisfy the violent demands of the Jefuits; nothing less than the entire ruin of the Jansenists could appeale their fury. Such, therefore, among the latter, as made the least opposition to the declaration in question, were cast into prison, or sent into exile, or involved in some other species of persecution; and it is well known, that this feverity was a confequence of the fuggestions of the Jesuits, and of their influence in cabinet-councils.

[1] See Du Mas, Histoire des Cinq Propositions, p. 158.— Gerberon, Histoire Generale du Jansenisme, p. ii. p. 516.

XLV. The lenity or prudence of CLEMENT IX. C E N T. fuspended, for a while, the calamities of those who had facrificed their liberty and their fortunes to their zeal for the doctrine of Augustine, and gave them both time to breathe, and reason to hope for better days. This change, which happened in the year 1669, was occasioned by the fortitude and resolution of the bishops of Angers, Beauvais, Pamiers, and Alet, who obstinately and gloriously refused to subscribe, without the proper explications and diffinctions, the oath or de- clement, claration that had produced fuch troubles and divisions in the church. They did not indeed stand alone in the breach; for when the court of Rome began to menace and level its thunder at their heads, nineteen bishops more arose with a noble intrepidity, and adopted their cause, in solemn remonstrances, addressed both to the king of France and the Roman pontif. These resolute protesters were joined by Anne Genevieve DE BOURBON, duchels of Longueville, a heroine of the first rank both in birth and magnanimity, who, having renounced the pleafures and vanities of the world, which had long employed her most ferious thoughts, espoused, with a devout ardour, the doctrines and cause of the Jansenists, and most earnestly implored the clemency of the Roman pontif in their behalf. Moved by these entreaties, and also by other arguments and confiderations of like moment, CLEMENT IX. became fo indulgent as to accept of a conditional fubscription to the famous declaration, and to permit doctors of ferupulous confeiences to fign it according to the mental interpretation they thought proper to give it. This instance of papal condefcenfion and lenity was no fooner made public, than the Jansenists began to come forth from their lurking-places, to return from their voluntary exile, and to enjoy their former tranquillity and freedom.

XVII. Sест. II. PART I. This perfecution is fuspended under the pontificate of Clement IX.—I his fuspention commonly

CENT. freedom, being exempt from all uneasy appre-

SECT. II. hensions of any further persecution.

This remarkable event is commonly called the Peace of CLEMENT IX.; its duration, nevertheless, was but transitory [u]. It was violated in the year 1676, at the instigation of the Jesuits, by Lewis XIV., who declared, in a public edict, that it had only been granted for a time, out of a condescending indulgence to the tender and scrupulous consciences of a certain number of persons; but it was totally abolished after the death of the duchess of Longueville, which happened in the year 1679, and deprived the Jansenists of their principal support. From that [u] The transactions relating to this event, which were carried on under the pontificate of CLEMENT IX., are circumstantially related by Cardinal Rospigniosi, in his Commentarii, which Du PLESSIS D'ARGENTRE has subjoined to his Elementa Theologica, published in 8vo at Paris, in the year 1716. See also this last-mentioned author's Colledio judiciorum de novis erroribus, tom. iii. p. ii. p. 336. in which the letters of CLEMENT IX. are inferted. Two Jansenists have written the History of the Clementine Peace. VARET, vicar to the archbishop of Sens, in an anonymous work entitled, Relation de ce qui s'est passé dans l'assaire de la Paix de l'Eglise sous la Pape CLEMENT IX.; and QUESNEL, in an anonymous production alfo, entitled, La Paix de CLEMENT IX., ou Demonstration des deux faussetés capitales avancées dans l'Histoire des Cinq Propositions contre la foi des disciples de St. Augustin. That Varet was the author of the former, is afferted in the Catéchisme Hiswas the author of the bright of the street of the sound of the latter came from the pen of QUESNEL, we learn from the writer of Billiothéque Janséniste, p. 314.—There was another accurate and interesting account of this transaction published in the year 1706, in two volumes 8vo, under the following title: Relation de ce qui s'est passe dans l'ossaire de la paix de l'Eglife fous le Pupe CLEMENT IX., avec les Lettres, Alles, Memoires, et autres pièces qui y ont rapport.-The important fervices that the duchefs of Longueville rendered the Jansenists in this affair are related with elegance and spirit by VILLE-FORT, in his Vie d'Anne Genevieve de Bourbon, Ducheffe de Longueville, tom. ii. livr. vi. p. 89, of the edition of Amflerdam (1739), which is more complete and ample than the edition of Paris.

time their calamities were renewed, and they were c ENT. purfued with the fame malignity and rage that XVII. they had before experienced. Some of them PART I. avoided the rifing florm by a voluntary exile; others fustained it with invincible fortifude and constancy of mind; others turned aside its fury, and escaped its violence, as well as they could, by dexterity and prudence. Anthony Arnaup. who was the head and leader of the party, fled into Holland in the year 1679 [w]; and, in this retreat, he not only escaped the fury of his enemies, but had it in his power to hurt them confiderably, and actually made the Jefuits feel the weight of his talents and the extent of his influence. For the admirable eloquence and fagacity of this great man gave him fuch an afcendant in the Netherlands, that the greatest part of the churches there embraced his opinions, and adopted his cause; the Romish congregations in Holland also were, by his influence, and the ministry of his intimate friends and adherents, John Neercassel and Peter Coddeus, bishops of Castorie and Schasto [x], entirely gained over to the Jansenist party. These latter still persevere with the utmost steadiness in the principles of

XLVI. It

Jansenism; and, secured under the protection of the Dutch government, defy the threats, and hold in derision, the resentment of the Roman pontifs [v].

[y] It must however be observed, that, notwithstanding

[[]w] For an account of this great man, fee BAYLE'S Distingury, vol. i. at the article ARTHON ARNAUD; as also Historic alregée de la vie et des onorages de M. ARNAUD, published at Cologa, in 8vo.—The change introduced into the Romith churches in Holland is mentioned by LATITAU, Vie de CLEMENT XI., tom. i. p. 123. For an account of Coddeus, NEERCASSEL, and VARET, and the other patrons of Jansensian among the Dutch, see the Distinguistic des Livres Jansensians, tom. i. p. 48. 21. 353. tom. ii. p. 406. tom. iv. p. 119.

[x] Bishops in partilus infidelium.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

The auffere

picty of the Janfenists.

XLVI. It is not only on account of their embracing the doctrine of Augustine concerning Divine Grace (a doctrine which bears a striking refemblance with that of the Calvinists), that the Jansenists have incurred the displeasure and refentment of the Jesuits. They are charged with many other circumstances, which appear intolerable to the warm votaries of the church of Rome. And indeed it is certain, that the various controversies, which have been mentioned above, were excited in that church principally by the Jansenists, and have been propagated and handed down by them, even to our times, in a prodigious multitude of their books published both in France and in the Netherlands [z]. But that which offends most the Jesuits, and the other creatures of the Pontif, is the aufterity of this party, and the feverity that reigns in their fystem of moral discipline and practical religion. For the Jansenists cry out against the corruptions of the church of Rome, and complain that neither its doctrines nor morals retain any traces of their former purity. They reproach the clergy with an universal depravation of sentiments and manners, and entire forgetfulness of the dignity of their character and the duties of their vocation. They censure the licentiousness of the monastic Orders, and infift upon the necessity of reforming their discipline according to the rules of fanctity, abftinence, and felf-denial, that were originally prescribed by their respective founders. They maintain also, that the people ought to be carefully instructed in all the doctrines and precepts the afcendant the Jansenish have in Holland, the Jesuits, for some time past, have by artifice and disguise got a considerable footing among the Romith churches that are tolerated by the republic.

[z] See Hift. Eccles. Rom. Sec. xvi. § xxxi.

PART I.

of Christianity, and that, for this purpose, the CENT. Holv Scriptures and Public Liturgies should be SECT. H. offered to their perufal in their mother-tongue; and, finally, they look upon it as a matter of the highest moment to perfuade all Christians that true piety does not confift in the observance of pompous rites, or in the performance of external acts of devotion, but in inward holiness and divine love.

These sentiments of the Jansenists, on a general view, feem just and rational, and suitable to the spirit and genius of Christianity; but, when we examine the particular branches into which they extend these general principles, the consequences they deduce from them, and the manner in which they apply them, in their rules of discipline and practice, we shall find, that the piety of this famous party is deeply tinged both with fuperfitition and fanaticism; that it more especially fayours the harsh and enthusiastical opinion of the My/tics; and, of confequence, that the Jansenists are not undefervedly branded by their adversaries with the denomination of Rigourists [a]. This denomination

[a] They who defire to form a just notion of the difma! piety of the Janfenists (which carries the unseemly features of that gloomy devotion that was formerly practifed by fanatical hermits in the deferts of Syria, Lylia, and Egypt, but is entirely foreign from the dictates of reason and the amiable spirit of Christianity), have only to perufe the epiftles and other writings of the Abbot of St. CYRAN, who is the great oracle of the party. This abbot was a well-meaning man; and his piety, fuch as it was, carried in it the marks of fineerity and fervor; he was also superior, perhaps, as a paitor, to the greateft part of the Roman catholic doctors; and his learning, more especially his knowledge of religious antiquity, was very confiderable: but to propose this man as a complete and perfect model of genuine piety, and as a most accurate and accumplished teacher of Christian virtue, is an absurdity peculiar to the Janfenists, and can be adopted by no person who knows what genuine piety and Christian virtue are. That we > may not feem to detraft rafely, and without reason, from the merit of this eminent man, it will not be improper to confirm what we have faid by tome inflances. This good abbot, having undertaken to vanquish the Heretics (i. e. the Protestants) in a prolix and extensive work, was obliged to read, or at least to look into, the various writings published by that impious tribe; and this he did in company with his nephew MARTIN DE BARCOS, who refembled him entirely in his fentiments and manners. But before he would venture to open a book composed by a Protestant, he constantly marked it with the fign of the crofs, to expel the evil spirit. What weakness and super-Pition did this ridiculous proceeding discover! for the good man was perfuaded that Satan had fixed his refidence in the books of the Protestants; but it was not fo easy to determine where he imagined the wicked spirit lay, whether in the paper, in the letters, between the leaves, or in the doctrines of thefe infernal productions? Let us fee the account that is given of this matter by LANCELOT, in his Mémoires touchant la vie de M. l' Abbé de S. Cyran, tom. i. p. 226. His words are as follows: Il lifoit ces livres avec tant de piété, qu'en les prenant il les exercifoit toujours en faifant la figne de la Croix deffus, ne doutant point que le Démon n'y refidoit actuellement. His attachment to Augustine was so excessive, that he looked upon as facred and divine even those opinions of that great man, which the wifer part of the Romish doctors had rejected as erroneous and highly dangerous. Such, among others, was that extravagant and pernicious tenet, that the faints are the only lawful proprietors of the world; and that the wicked have no right, by the divine law, to those things which they poffes justly, in confequence of the decisions of human law. To this purpose is the following affertion of our abbot, as we find it in FONTAINE's Mémoires pour servir à l'Histoire de Port-Royal, tom. i. p. 201. Jesus Christ n'est encore entré dans la possession de son Royaume temporel, et des liens du monde qui lui appartiennent, que par cette RETITE PORTION qu'en tient l'Eglise par les bénefices de ses Clercs, qui ne sont que les fermiers et les depositaires de Jesus Christ. If, therefore, we are to give credit to this vifionary man, the golden age is approaching, when lesus Christ, having pulled down the mighty from their feats, and dethroned the kings and princes of the earth, shall reduce the whole world under his fole dominion, and give it over to the government of priefts and monks, who are the princes of his church.—After we have feen fuch fentiments as these maintained by their oracle and chief, it is but natural to be furprifed when we hear the Janfe

C E N T. denomination they merited, in a peculiar man-XVII. SECT. M. ner, by their doctrine concerning Repentance and Part I. Penance,

Penance, whose tendency; considered both in a CENT. civil and religious point of view, is fingularly

SECT. II. PART I.

nists boatting of their zeal in defending fovereign states, and in general the civil rights of mankind, against the stratagems and usurpations of the Roman pontifs.

The notions of the abbot of St. CYRAN concerning prayer, which breathe the fanatical spirit of mysticism, will further confirm what we have faid of his propenfity to enthufialm. It is, for example, a favourite maxim with him, that the Chriftian who prays, ought never to recollect the good things he stands in need of in order to ask them of God, since true prayer does not confift in diffinct notions and clear ideas of what we are doing in that folemn act, but in a certain blind impulse of divine love. Such is the account given of the abbot's fentiments on this head by LANCELOT, in his Memoires touchant la vie de l'Albé de S. Cyran, tom. ii. p. 44.—Il ne croyoit pas, fays that author, que l'on put faire quelque effort pour s'appliquer à quelque point, ou à quelque pensée particuliere—perce que la ve-ritable priere est plutôt un attrait de son amour, qui emporte notre cœur vers lui, et nous enleve comme hors de nous mêmes, que non pas une occupation de notre esprit, qui se remplisse de l'idée de quelque objet quoique divin. According to this hypothesis, the man prays best who neither thinks nor asks in that act of devotion. This is, indeed, a very extraordinary account of the matter, and contains an idea of prayer which feems to have been quite unknown to CHRIST and his Apostles; for the former has commanded us to address our prayers to God in a set form of words; and the latter frequently tell us the subjects of their petitions and fupplications.

But of all the errors of this Arch-janfenist, none was so pernicious as the fanatical notion he entertained of his being the refidence of the Deity, the instrument of the Godhead, by which the divine nature itself effentially operated. It was in confequence of this dangerous principle, that he recommends it as a duty incumbent on all pious men to follow, without confulting their judgment or any other guide, the first motions and impulses of their minds, as the dictates of heaven. And indeed the Jansenists, in general, are intimately perfuaded, that God operates immediately upon the minds of those who have composed, or rather suppressed, all the motions of the understanding and of the will, and that to fuch he declares, from above, his intentions and commands; fince whatever thoughts, defigns, or inclinations arise within them, in this calm state of tranquillity and filence, are to be confidered as the direct fuggestions and oracles of the divine wisdom. See, for a further account of this peftilential doctrine, Memoires de Port-Royal, pernicious.

tom, iii. p. 246,

CENT. pernicious. For they make repentance confift chiefly in those voluntary sufferings, which the transgressor inslicts upon himself, in proportion to the nature of his crimes and the degree of his guilt. As their notions of the extent of man's original corruption are greatly exaggerated, they prescribe remedies to it that are of the same nature. They look upon Christians as bound to expiate this original guilt by acts of mortification performed in folitude and filence, by torturing and macerating their bodies, by painful labour, excessive abstinence, continual prayer and contemplation; and they hold every person obliged to increase these voluntary pains and sufferings, in proportion to the degree of corruption they have derived from nature, or contracted by a vicious and licentious course of life. Nay, they carry these autherities to so high a pitch, that they do not scruple to call those bely felf-tormentors, who have gradually put an end to their days by exceffive abstinence or labour, the facred victims of repentance, that have been confumed by the fire of divine love. Not fatisfied with this fanatical language, they go still farther, and superstitionsly maintain, that the conduct of these felf-murderers is peculiarly meritorious in the eye of heaven; and that their fufferings, macerations, and labours, appeale the anger of the Deity, and not only contribute to their own felicity, but draw down abundant bleffings upon their friends and upon the church. We might confirm this account by various examples, and more especially by that of the famous Abbe DE PARIS, the great wonder-worker of the Jansenists, who put himfelf to a most painful death, in order to satisfy the justice of an incensed God $\lceil b \rceil$; such was the picture picture he had formed of the Best of Beings in his CENT.

[[]b] See Morinus, Com. de Panitentia, Praf. p. 3. in which there is a tacit censure of the penance of the Jansenists.

disordered fancy.

SECT. II.

Port-Royal.

XLVII. A striking example of this austere, for PART I. bidding, and extravagant species of devotion was The conexhibited in that celebrated female convent called vent of Port-Royal in the fields, which was fituated in a retired, deep, and gloomy vale, not far from Paris. The inspection and government of this austere fociety was given by HENRY IV., about the commencement of this century, to JAQUE-LINE, daughter of Anthony Arnaud $\lceil c \rceil$, who, after her conversion, assumed the name of MARIE ANGELIQUE DE LA ST. MADELAINE. This lady had at first led a very dissolute life $\lceil d \rceil$, which was the general case of the cloistered fair in France, about this period; but a remarkable change happened in her fentiments and manners, in the year 1609, when she resolved no more to live like a nun, but to confecrate her future days to deep devotion and penitential exercises. This holy resolution was strengthened by her acquaintance with the famous François DE Sales, and the abbot of ST. CYRAN. The last of these pious connexions she formed in the year 1623, and modelled both her own conduct and the manners of ⁻See, on the other hand, the Memoires de Port-Royal, p. 483. -The Jansenists, among all the meritorious actions of the abbot of ST. CYKAN, find none more worthy of admiration and applause than his restoring from oblivion the true system of penitential discipline; and they consider him as the second author or parent of the doctrine of penance. See Memoires de Port-Royal, tom. iii. p. 445, 504. This very doctrine, however, of penance was one of the principal reasons of his being committed to prison by the order of Cardinal RICHELIEU. Ibid. tom. i. p. 233, 452.

^[6] An eminent lawyer, and father to the famous ARNAUD. doctor in Sorboune.

Mosheim is an egregious mistake, which seems to have proceeded from his mifunderstanding a passage in BAYLL's Distinary, vol. i. p. 338. note F, fourth edition in French.

XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

CENT. her convent after the doctrine and example of these devout men. Hence it happened, that, during the whole course of this century, the convent of Port-Royal excited the indignation of the Jesuits, the admiration of the Jansenists, and the attention of Europe. The holy virgins of this famous fociety observed, with the utmost rigour and exactness, that ancient rule of the Cistercians, which had been almost every where abrogated on account of its excessive and intolerable austerity; nay, they even went beyond its most cruel demands [e]. Such was the fame of this devout nunnery,

> [e] There is a prodigious multitude of books still extant, in which the rife, progress, laws, and fanctity of this famous convent are described and extolled by eminent Jansenists, who, at the fame time, deplore its fate in the most doleful strains. Of this multitude we shall mention those only which are easy to be acquired, and which contain the most modern and circumftantial accounts of that celebrated establishment.-The Benedictines of St. Maur have given an exact though dry history of this convent in their Gallia Christiana, tom. vii. p. 910. A more elegant and agreeable account of it; but an account charged with imperfection and partiality, was composed by the famous poet RACINE, under the title of Abrégé de l'Histoire de Port-Royal, and was published, after having passed through many preceding editions, in the year 1750, at Amsterdam, among the works of his fon LEWIS RACINE, tom. ii. p. 275-366. The external flate and form of this convent are professedly described by Moleon, in his Voyages Liturgiques, p. 234 .- Add to thefe, Nic. Fontaine, Memoires pour fervir à l'Histoire de Port-Royal, published at Cologn (or rather at Utrecht) in two volumes 8vo, in the year 1738 .- Du Fosse, Memoires pour scrvir à l'Histoire de Port-Royal.-Recueil de plufieurs pieces pour fervir à l'Histoire de Port-Royal, published at Utrecht, in 8vo, in the year 1740.—The editor of this last compilation promifes, in his Preface, further collections of pieces relative to the fame fubject, and feems to infinuate, that a complete history of Port-Royal, drawn from these and other valuable and authentic records, will fooner or later fee the light. See, befides the authors abovementioned, LANCELOT, Memoires touchant la Vie de l'Abbé de S. Cyran. All these authors contine their relations to the external form and various revolutions of this famous convent. Its internal state, its rules of discipline.

nunnery, that multitudes of pious persons were cent. ambitious to dwell in its neighbourhood, and SECT.II. that a great part of the Jansenist-penitents, or felf- PART I. tormentors, of both fexes, built huts without its precincts, where they imitated the manners of those austere and gloomy fanatics, who, in the fourth and fifth centuries, retired into the wild and uncultivated places of Syria and Egypt, and were commonly called, The Fathers of the Defart. The end which these Penitents had in view was, by filence, hunger, thirst, prayer, bodily labour, discipline, the manners of its virgins, and the incidents and transactions that have happened between them and the holy neighbourhood of Jansenists, are described and related by another fet of writers; fee Memoires pour fervir à l'Histoire de Port-Royal, et à la Vie de MARIE ANGELIQUE D'ARNAUD, published at Utrecht in 5 vols. 8vo, in the year 1742 .-- Vies interessantes et edifiantes des religieuses de Port-Royal, et de plufieur's perfonnes qui leur étoient attachées. There are already four volumes of this work publified, of which the first appeared at Utrecht in the year 1750, in 8vo, and it must be acknowledged, that they all contain feveral anecdotes and records that are interefting and curious .-- For an account of the suppression and abolition of this convent, fee the Memoires fur la destruction de l'Abbaye de Port-Royal des Champs, published in 8vo, in 1711. If we are not much mistaken, all these histories and relations have been much lefs ferviceable to the reputation of this famous convent than the Janfenin party are willing to think. When we view Arnaud, Tillemont, Nicole, Le Maitre, and the other authors of Port Royal, in their learned productions, they then appear truly great; but, when we lay afide their works, and, taking up these histories of Port-Royal, see these great men in private life, in the conflant practice of that au-Itere discipline of which the Jansenhits boast to foolishly, they indeed then shrink almost to nothing, appear in the contemptible light of fanatics, and feem totally unworthy of the fame they have acquired. When we read the Difcourfes that Isaac LE MAITRE, commonly called SACY, pronounced at the bar, together with his other ingenious productions, we cannot refule him the applause that is due to such an elegant and accomplished writer; but when we meet with this polite author at Port-Royal, mixed with labourers and reapers, and with the fpade or the fickle in his hand, he then certainly makes a comical figure, and can fearcely be looked upon as perfectly right in his head.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART I. watchings, forrow, and other voluntary acts of felf-denial, to efface the guilt, and remove the pollution the foul had derived from natural corruptions or cvil habits [f]. They did not, however, all observe the same discipline, or follow the fame kind of application and labour. The more learned confumed their strength in composing laborious productions filled with facred and profane erudition, and fome of these have, no doubt, deferved well of the republic of letters: others were employed in teaching youth the rudiments of language and the principles of science; but the far greatest part exhausted both the health of their bodies and the vigour of their minds in fervile industry and rural labour; and thus pined away by a flow kind of death. What is fingularly furprifing is that many of these voluntary victims of an inhuman piety were persons illustrious both by their birth and stations, who after having diftinguished themselves in civil or military employments, debased themselves so far in this penitential retreat, as to assume the character, offices, and labour of the lowest fervants.

This celebrated retreat of the devout and auftere Jansenists was subject to many vicisfitudes during the whole course of this century: at one time it slourished in unrivalled glory; at another it seemed eclipsed, and on the brink of ruin. At length, however, the period of its total extinction approached. The nuns obstinately refused to subscribe the declaration of Pope ALEXANDER C EN T. VII., that has been fo often mentioned; on the SECT. II. other hand, their convent and rule of discipline PART I. was confidered as detrimental to the interests of the kingdom, and a dishonour to some of the first families in France; hence Lewis XIV., in the year 1709, fet on by the violent counsels of the Jesuits, ordered the convent of Port-Royal to be demolished, the whole building to be levelled with the ground, and the nuns to be removed to Paris. And, left there should still remain some fecret fuel to nourish the flame of superstition in that place, he ordered the very carcasses of the nuns and devout Jansenists to be dug up and buried elfewhere.

[[]f] Among the first and most eminent of these penitents was Isaac le Maitre, a celebrated lawyer at Paris, whose eloquence had procured him a shining reputation, and who, in the year 1637, retired to Port-Royal to make expiation for his sins. The retreat of this eminent man raised new enemies to the abbot of St. Cyran. See the Memoires pour l'Histoire de Port-Royal, tem. i. p. 233.—The example of Le Maitre was followed by a vast number of persons of all ranks, and, among these, by some persons of the highest distinction. See Vies des Religieuse de Port-Royal, tom. i. p. 141.

XLVIII. The other controversies that disturb- The coned the tranquillity of the church of Rome, were but light blafts when compared with this violent the Immutu-late Concerning the I cans and Dominicans, concerning the Immaculate Virgin Conception of the Virgin MARY, which was maintained by the former, and denied by the latter, gave much trouble and perplexity to the Roman pontifs, and more especially to PAUL V., GRE-GORY XV., and ALEXANDER VII. The kingdom of Spain was thrown into fuch combustion, and fo miserably divided into factions by this controverfy, about the beginning of this century, that folemn embassies were fent to Rome, both by PHILIP III. and his fuccessor, with a view to engage the Roman pontif to determine the question, or, at any rate, to put an end to the contest by a public bull. But, notwithstanding the weightv folicitations of these monarchs, the oracle of Rome pronounced nothing but ambiguous words, and its high priests prudently avoided coming to a plain and positive decision of the matter in question. For if they were awed, on the one hand, by the warm remonstrances of the Spanish

CENT. court, which favoured the fentiment of the Fran-XVII. SECT. II. discans, they were restrained, on the other the crewit well influence of the Dominicans. So that, after the most carnest entreaties and importunities, all that could be obtained from the pontif, by the court of Spain, was a declaration, intimating, that the opinion of the Franciscans had a high degree of probability on its fide, and forbidding the Dominicans to oppose it in a public manner; but this declaration was accompanied with another [g], by which the Franciscans were prohibited, in their turn, from treating as erroneous the doctrine of the Dominicans. This pacific accommodation of matters would have been highly laudable in a prince or civil magnitrate, who, unacquainted with theological questions of fuch an abstruse nature, preserved the tranquillity of his people to the discussion of such an intricate and unimportant point; but whether it was ho[g] See Frid. Ulr. Calinti Historia Immaculata Conceptionis B. Virginis MARIE, published at Itelmstadt in 4to, in the year 1696 .- Hornbeckii Comm. ad Bullem Urbani VIII., de diebus Festis, p. 250 .- LAUNOII Preservotiones de Conceptu Firginis MARIX, tom. i. p. i. oper. p. g .- Long after this period, CLEMENT XI. went a step further, and appointed, in the year 1708, a fellival to be celebrated, in honour of the Immaculate Conseption of the Firgin MARY, throughout the Romish church. See the Memoires de Trevoux, for the year 1700, art. XXXVII. p. 514. But the Dominicans obfilirately deny that the oblyction of this law extends to them, and perfift in maintaining their arcient docurine, though with more modesty and circumspection than they formerly discovered in this debate. And when we confider that this doctrine of theirs has never been expressly condemned by any pope, and that they are not in the least molefled, nor even confured, for refusing to celebrate the fellival abovementioned, it appears evidently, from all this, that the terms of the papal edicl are to be underflood with certain reductions, and interpreted in a mild and indulgent manner; and that the spirit of this color is not contrary to the town of the former declarations of the pontifs on this bead. See LAMINDUS PRITANIUS (a ficitious name affumed by the author MURATORI) De ingeniorum moderatione in religionis negotio, p. 254.

nourable

nourable to the Roman pontif, who boasts of a CENT. Divine right to decide all religious controversies, SECT. II. and pretends to a degree of inspiration that places PART I. him beyond the possibility of erring, we leave to the confideration of those who have his glory at heart.

XLIX. The controversies with the Mystics Quietism, were now renewed, and that fect, which in for- troversies mer times enjoyed fuch a high degree of reputa- occasioned by the doction and authority, was treated with the greatest trine of feverity, and involved in the deepest distress towards the conclusion of this century. This unhappy change in their affairs was principally occasioned by the fanaticism and imprudence of MICHAEL DE MOLINOS, a Spanish priest, who refided at Rome, and the fame of whose ardent piety and devotion procured him a confiderable number of disciples of both sexes. A book published at Rome, in the year 1681, by this ecclefiastic. under the title of the Spiritual Guide, alarmed the doctors of the church $\lceil b \rceil$. This book contained, befides the usual precepts and institutions of Myflic theology, feveral notions relating to a fpiritual and contemplative life, that feemed to revive or the con-

[b] This book, which was composed in Spanish, and published, for the sirst time, in the year 1675, was honoured with the approbation and encomiums of many eminent and respectable personages. It was published in Italian in several places, and at length at Rome, in 1681. It was afterwards translated into French, Dutch, and Latin, and passed through several editions in France, Italy, and Holland. The Latin translation, which bears the title of Manuduāio Spiritualis, was published at Halle, in the year 1687, in 8vo, by FRANK. There is another work of Mounos, composed in the fame spirit, Concerning the daily celebration of the Communion, which was also condemned. See the Recueil de diverses pieces concernant le Quietisme et les Quietistes, ou MOLINOS ses sentimens et ses disciples, published in 8vo at Amsterdam, in the year 1688, in which the reader will find a French translation of the Spiritual Guide, together with a collection of Letters on various fubjects, written by Molinos.

XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

CENT. the pernicious and infernal errors of the Beghards, and open a door to all forts of diffolution and licentiousness. The principles of Molinos, which have been very differently interpreted by his friends and enemies, amount to this: "That the " whole of religion confifts in the perfect calm " and tranquillity of a mind removed from all " external and finite things, and centered in God, " and in fuch a purc love of the Supreme Being, " as is independent on all prospect of interest or " reward;" or, to express the doctrine of this Mystic in other words, "The foul, in the pur-" fuit of the supreme good, must retire from the " reports and gratifications of fense, and, in ge-" neral, from all corporeal objects, and, impo-" fing filence upon all the motions of the under-" ftanding and will, must be absorbed in the " Deity." Hence the denomination of Quietifts was given to the followers of Molinos; though that of Mystics, which was their vulgar title, was more applicable, and expressed with more propriety their fanatical fystem. For the doctrine of Molinos had no other circumstance of novelty attending it, than the fingular and unufual terms he employed in unfolding his notions, and the ingenuity he discovered in digesting what the ancient Mystics had thrown out in the most confused and incoherent jargon, into something that looked like a fystem. The Jesuits, and other zealous votaries of Rome, foon perceived that the fystem of Molinos was a tacit centure of the Romish church, as having departed from the spirit of true religion, by placing the effence of piety in external works, and in the performance of a certain round of rites and ceremonies. But the warmest opponents Molinos met with was from the French ambassador $\lceil i \rceil$ at Rome, who raised a most violent persecution against him. This made CENT. many imagine, that it was not the theological fy- XVII. ftem of Molinos alone that had inflamed the PART I. refentment of that minister, but that some considerations of a political nature had been blended with this famous controversy, and that the Spanish Mystic had opposed the designs and negociations of the French monarch at the court of Rome. However that may have been, Molinos, unable to refist the storm, and abandoned by those from whom he chiefly expected fuccour, yielded to it, in the year 1685, when, notwithstanding the number, rank, and credit of his friends at Rome, and the particular marks of fayour he had received from the Roman pontif $\lceil k \rceil$, he was cast into prison. Two years after this, he was obliged to renounce, in a public manner, the errors of which he was accused, and this folemn recantation was followed by a fentence of perpetual imprisonment, from which he was, in an advanced age, delivered by death, in the year 1696 [1]. The candid and impartial will be obliged to acknowledge, that the opinions and expressions of this enthusiast were persidiously mifrepresented and perverted by the Jesuits and others, whose interest it was that he should be put out of the way, and excluded from every thing but contemplation and repose; and it is most certain, that this doctrine was charged with confequences

[k] INNOCENT XI.

^[/] He was born in the diocese of Saragossa, in the year 1627; fee Biblioth. Janfoniste, p. 469.—For an account of this controverfy, fee the Narrative of the Proceedings of the Controverfy concerning Quietifin, which is subjoined to the German translation of Burner's Travels.—As also Arnold Historia Eccles. et Haretic. tom. iii. c. xvii. p. 176 .- JAEGERI Histor. Eccles. et Polit. Sæculi xvii. Decenn. ix. p. 26 .- PLESSIS D'ARGENTRE, Collectio judiciorum de novis erroribus, tom. iii. p. ii. p. 357, where may be feen the papal edicts relating to this controverly.

ENT. XVII. CT. II. ARTI. which he neither approved nor even apprehended. But, on the other hand, it must also be confessed, that the system of Molinos was chargeable with the greatest part of the reproaches that are justly thrown upon the Mystics, and favoured much the illusions and follies of those fanatics, who would make the crude visions of their disordered fancies pass for Divine revelations [m].

ollowers Molinos.

L. It would have been truly furprifing had a fystem of piety, that was so adapted to seduce the indolent mind, to captivate the warm imagination, and to melt the tender heart, been destitute of votaries and followers. But this was by no means the case. In Italy, Spain, France, and the Netherlands, Molinos had a confiderable number of disciples, and, besides the reasons we have now hinted, another circumstance must have contributed much to multiply his votaries; for, in all parts of the Romish dominion, there were numbers of persons, who had fense and knowledge enough to perceive, that the whole of religion could not confift in external rites and bodily mortifications, but too little to direct themselves in religious matters, or to substitute what was right in the place of what they knew to be wrong; and hence it was natural enough for them to follow the first plausible guide that was offered to them. But the church of Rome, apprehensive of the confequences of this Myssic theology, left no method unemployed that could contribute to ftop its progress; and, by the force of promisings and threatenings, of feverity and mildness properly applied, stifled in the birth the commotions and changes it feemed adapted to excite. The death of Molinos contributed also to dispel the anxiety of the Romish doctors, fince his disciples and CENT. followers feemed too inconfiderable to deferve any SECT. II. notice. Among these are generally reckoned Cardinal Petrucci, Francis de la Combe, a Barnabite friar, the spiritual director of Madame GUYON (who shall be mentioned more particularly), FRANCIS MALAVALLE, BERNIERE DE Louvigni, and others of less note. These enthufiasts, as is common among the Mystics, differ from Molinos in feveral points, and are also divided among themselves; this diversity is, however, rather nominal than real; and, if we confider the true fignification of the terms by which they express their respective notions, we shall find that they all fet out from the same principles, and tend to the fame conclusions $\lceil n \rceil$.

[[]m] All that can be alleged in defence of Molinos has been gathered together by Weismannus, in his Hiftor. Eccle-fiaft. Sæc. xvii. p. 555.

LI. One of the principal patrons and propa- The cofe of gators of Quictifm in France was MARIE BOUVI- Guyon and ERES DE LA MOTHE GUYON, a woman of fashion, Fencion, remarkable for the goodness of her heart and the regularity of her manners, but of an inconstant and unsettled temper, and subject to be drawn away by the feduction of a warm and unbridled fancy. This female apostle of Mysticism derived all her ideas of religion from the feelings of her own heart [0], and described its nature to others according cording as she felt it herself; a manner of proceeding of all others the most uncertain and delusive. And accordingly, her religious sentiments made a great noise in the year 1687, and gave offence to many. Hence, after they had been accurately and attentively examined by feveral men of eminent piety and learning, they were, at length, pronounced erroneous and unfound, and, in the year 1697, were professedly confuted by the celebrated Bossuer. This gave rife to a controverfy of still greater moment, between the prelate last mentioned and Francis SALIGNAC DE FENELON, archbishop of Cambray, whose sublime virtue and superior genius were beheld with veneration in all the countries of Europe. Of these two disputants, who, in point of eloquence, were avowedly without either fuperiors or equals in France, the latter feemed disposed to favour the religious system of Madame Guyon. For when Bossuer defired his approbation of the book he had composed, in answer to the sentiments of that female Mystic, FeneLon not only refused it, but openly declared that this pious woman had been treated with great partiality and injustice, and that the censures of her adversary were unmerited and groundlefs. Nor did the warm imagination of this amiable prelate permit him to stop here, where the distates of prudence ought to have fet bounds to his zeal; for, in the year 1607, he published a book $\lceil p \rceil$, in which he adopted feveral of the tenets of Madame Guyon, and more especially that favourite doctrine of the Mystics, which teaches, that the love of the Supreme Being must be pure and disinterested; that the fertile imagination and shallow judgment of this female mystic.—See a further account of her in the Letters of Mad. de Manneyon, tom, i. p. 210, tom, ii. p. 417, 47, 40, 51.

[n] The writings of these fanatics are enumerated and flarply criticised by COLONIA, in the Bibliotheque Quietisse (which he has subjoined to his Eibliotheque Jansenssle), p. 455-488.—See also GOD. Arnold Historia et Descriptio Theologie Myflica, p. 364, & Poiret's Bibliotheca Myflicorum, published at Amflerdam, in 8vo, in 1708.

[0] Madame Guyon wrote her own life and spiritual adventures in French, and published them in the year 1720. Her writings, which abound with childish allegories and myftic ejaculations, have been translated into German. Her principal production was La Bible de Mad. Guyon, avec des explications et reflections qui regardent la vie interieure. This Bible with Annotations relating to the bidden or internal life, was published in the year 1715, at Amsterdam, under the name of Cologn, in twenty volumes in 8vo, which abundantly discover CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

MAINTENON, tom. i. p. 2.19. tom. ii. p. 45, 47, 49, 51.

[p] This book was entitled, Explication des Maxims des Saints fur la vie imérieure. It has been translated into Latin.

is, exempt from all views of interest and all hope CENT. of reward [q]. This doctrine Fenelon explained SECT. II. with a pathetic eloquence, and confirmed it by PART I. the authority of many of the most eminent and pious among the Romish doctors. Bossuet, whose leading passion was ambition, and who beheld with anxiety the rifing fame and eminent talents of FeneLon as an obstacle to his glory, was highly exasperated by this opposition, and left no method unemployed which artifice and jealoufy could fuggeft, to mortify a rival whose illustrious merit had rendered fo formidable. For this purpose, he threw himself at the feet of Lewis XIV., implored the fuccours of the Roman pontif, and, by his importunities and stratagems, obtained, at length, the condemnation of FeneLon's book. This condemnation was pronounced in the year 1699, by Innocent XII., who, in a public brief, declared that book unfound in general, and branded with more peculiar marks of difapprobation twenty-three propositions, specified by the Congregation that had been appointed to examine it. The book, however, was condemned alone, without any mention of the author; and the con-

[q] This doctrine of the Mystics has thus far a foundation in reason and philosophy, that the moral perfections of the Deity are, in themselves, intrinsically amiable; and that their excellence is as much adapted to excite our efteem and love, as the experience of their beneficent effects in promoting our. well being, is to enflame our gratitude. The error, therefore, of the Myflics lay in their drawing extravagant conclusions from a right principle, and in their requiring in their followers a perpetual abstraction and separation of ideas which are intimately connected, and, as it were, blended together, fuch as felicity and perfection; for though these two are inseparable in fact, yet the Mystics, from a fantastic pretension to disinterestedness, would separate them right or wrong, and turned their whole attention to the latter. In their views also of the supreme Being, they overlooked the important relations he bears to us as benefactor and rewarder; relations that give rife to noble fentiments and important duties, and confined their views to his fupreme beauty, excellence, and perfection. duct

XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

CENT. duct of Fenelon on this occasion was very remarkable. He declared publicly his entire acquiescence in the fentence by which his book had been condemned, and not only read that fentence to his people in the pulpit at Cambray, but exhorted them to respect and obey the papal decree $\lceil r \rceil$. This step was differently interpreted by different perfons, according to their notions of this great man, or their respective ways of thinking. Some confidered it as an inftance of true magnanimity, as the mark of a meek and gentle spirit, that preferred the peace of the church to every private view of interest or glory. Others, less charitable, looked upon this submissive conduct as ignoble and pufillanimous, as denoting manifeltly a want of integrity, inafmuch as it supposed, that the prelate in question condemned with his lips what in his heart he believed to be true. thing indeed feems generally agreed on, and that is, that Fenelon perfifted, to the end of his days, in the fentiments which, in obedience to the order of the pope, he retracted and condemned in a public manner.

La Peyrere, White, Sfondrati, and Borri.

LII. Besides these controversies, which derived their importance chiefly from the influence and reputation of the disputants, and thus became productive of great tumults and divisions in the church, there were others excited by feveral innovators, whose new and fingular opinions were followed with troubles, though of a less momen-

[r] An ample and impartial account of this controverfy has been given by Toussaints du Plessis, a Benedictine, in his Histoire de l'Eglise de Meaux, livr. v. tom. i. p. 485—523.

Ramsay, in his Lise of Fenelon, written in French, and published at the Hague in the year 1723, is less impartial; but is nevertheless worthy of being consulted on this subject. See Voltaire, Siècle de Louis XIV., tom. ii. p. 301.—The public acts and edicts relating to this controverfy have been collected by Du Plessis Argentre, in his Collectio judiciorum de novis erroribus, tom. iii. p. ii. p. 402.

tous and permanent nature. Such was the strange CENT. doctrine of Isaac La Peyrere, who, in two Sect. H. fmall treatifes, published in the year 1655, main- PART I. tained, that it is the origin of the Jewish nation, and not of the human race, that we find recorded in the books of Moses, and that our globe was inhabited by many nations before ADAM, whom he confidered as the father of the Jews. Though PEYRERE was a protestant when he published this opinion, yet the doctors of the Romish church looked upon themselves as obliged to punish an error that feemed to strike at the foundation of all Revealed Religion; and therefore, in the year 1656, had him feized at Bruffels, and cast into prison, where, to escape the flames, he publicly renounced his erroneous fystem, and, to make a full expiation for it, embraced the populh religion [s].

THOMAS WHITE, known at different times, and in different countries, by the names of AL-BIUS, ANGLUS, CANDIDUS, BIANCHI [t], which he affumed fucceffively, made a confiderable figure, about the middle of this century, in England, Portugal, France, and the Netherlands, by the number and fubtilty of his philosophical productions; but he also incurred the displeasure of many of the doctors of his communion, on account of the novelty and fingularity of his opinions. He was undoubtedly a man of genius and penetration; but, being a passionate admirer

[[]s] BAYLE'S Dictionary at the article PEYRERE.—ARNOLDS Histor. Eccles. et Haret. tom. iii. p. 70.—Menagiana, published by De La Monnove, tom. ii. p. 40.

[[]t] All these denominations were relative to his true name, which was White. This man was a peculiar favourite of Sir Kenelm Diggy's, and mentions him with fingular veneration in his philosophical writings. See more of this White in Wood's Athena Oxon. 2d edit. vol. ii. p. 665, and in the Biograph. Brit. Article GLANVIL, vol. iv. p. 2206.

CENT. of the Peripatetic philosophy, he ventured to em-XVII. SECT. II. ploy it in the explication of some of the peculiar doctrines of the Romish church. This bold attempt led him imperceptibly out of the beaten road of popery, opened to him new views of things, and made him adopt notions that had never been heard of in the church of Rome; and hence his books were prohibited and condemned in feveral places, and particularly at Rome by the Congregation of the Index. This innovator is faid to have died in England, his native country, and to have left a fect behind him that embraced his doctrine, but, in process of time, fell into oblivion $\lceil u \rceil$.

His peculiarities, however, were nothing, in comparison with the romantic notions of JOSEPH FRANCIS BORRI, a Milanese knight, eminent for his knowledge of chymistry and physic; but who, at the fame time, appears to have been rather a madman than a heretic. The fancies broached by this man, concerning the VIRGIN MARY, the HOLY GHOST, the erection of a new celestial kingdom, of which he himfelf was to be the founder, and the downfal of the Roman pontif, are fo extravagant, childish, and absurd, that no fober person can view them in any other light than as the crude reveries of a difordered brain. Besides, the conduct of this fanatic, in several places, discovered the greatest vanity and levity; attended with that spirit of imposture that is ufually visible in quacks and mountebanks; and, indeed, in the whole of his behaviour, he feemed destitute of sense, integrity, and prudence. The inquifitors had fpread their fnares for Borri, but he luckily escaped them, and wandered up and down through a great part of Europe, giving himfelf out for another Esculapius, and pretending CENT. to be initiated into the most profound mysteries SECT. H. of chemical science. But in the year 1672, he imprudently fell into the clutches of the Roman pontif, who pronounced against him a sentence of perpetual imprisonment [50].

[[]u] See BAYLE's Didionary, at the Article Anglus .-BAILLET, Vie de Des CARTES, tom. ii. p. 245.

The last innovator we shall here mention is COELESTINE SFONDRATI, who, having formed the defign of terminating the disputes concerning predestination, by new explications of that doctrine, wrote a book upon that knotty fubject, wlich threw into combustion, in the year 1696, a confiderable part of the Romish church; fince it was, in fome things, agreeable to none of the contending parties, and neither fatisfied entirely the Jefuits nor their adversaries. Five French bishops, of great credit at the court of Rome, accused the author, notwithstanding the high rank of cardinal to which he had been raifed on account of his extensive learning, of various errors, and more especially of having departed from the fentiments and doctrine of Augustine. This accufation was brought before Innocent XII., in the year 1696, but the contest it seemed adapted to excite was nipt in the bud. The pontif appealed, or rather put off, the French prelates, with a fair promife that he would appoint a congregation to examine the cardinal's doctrine, and then pronounce fentence accordingly; but he forgot his promife, imitated the prudent conduct of his predecessors on like occasions, and did not venture to give a final decision to this intricate and knotty controver(y [x].

LIII. There

[x] This book, which was published at Rome in 4to, in the Vol. V.

[[]w] There is a very interesting article in BAYLE'S Distinsary relating to Borki, in which all the extravagancies of that wrong-headed man are curioufly related. See also Ar-NOLD, loc. cit. p. iii. c. xviii. p. 193.

CENT. XVII. SECF. II. PART I. Canonizations. LIII. There was fcarcely any change introduced into the ritual of the Romish church during this century, if we except an edict of URBAN VIII., for diminishing the number of holidays, which was issued out in the year 1643 [y]; we shall therefore conclude this account with a list of the faints added to the Kalendar by the Roman pontifs during the period now before us.

In the year 1601, CLEMENT VIII. raifed to that fpiritual dignity RAYMOND of PENNAFORT, the famous compiler of the Decretals; in 1608, Frances Pontiani, a Benedictine nun; and, in 1610, the eminent and illustrious Charles Borromeo, bishop of Milan, so justly celebrated for his exemplary piety, and almost unparalleled lines.

berality and beneficence.

GREGORY XV. conferred, in the year 1622, the honour of faintship on Theresia, a native of Avila in Spain, and a nun of the Carmelite Order.

URBAN VIII., in the year 1623, conferred the fame ghostly honours on Philip Neri, the founder year 1696, is entitled, Nodus Prædeflinationis diffolutus .- The Letters of the French bishops, with the answer of the Roman pontif, are to be found in Du Plessis D'Argentre's Collectio judiciorum de novis erroribus, tom. iii. p. ii. p. 394. and NATALIS ALEXANDER'S Theologia Dogmatica et Moralis, p. 877. The Letters of the bishops are remarkable in this respect, that they contain sharp animadversions against the femits and their discipline. The prelates express, in the strongett terms, their abhorrence of the doctrine of philosophical fin, which has rendered the Jefuits fo defervedly infamous, and their detellation of the methods of propagating Christianity employed by the missionaries of that Order in China. Nav, to express their aversion to the doctrine of SFONDRATI, they say, that his opinions are still more erroneous and pernicious than even those of the Molinifis. The doctrine of this cardinal has been accorately represented and compared with that of Augustin by the learned BASNAGE, in his Histoire de l'Eglise, livr. xii. c. iii. 6 mi. p. 712.

[y] The bell iffeed out by URBAN VIII., for diminishing

[9] The bull iffeed out by URBAN VIII., for diminifhing the number of the holidays celebrated in the church of Rome, may be seen in the Nouvelle Billistheque, tom. xv p. 88.

of the Order entitled, Fathers of the Oratory, in CENT. Italy; on IGNATIUS LOYOLA, the parent of the Jeth SECT. II. fuits; and on his chief disciple Francis Xavier, Part 1. the Jesuitical Apostle of the Indians.

ALEXANDER VII. canonized, in the year 1658, THOMAS DE VILLANOVA, a Spanish monk, of the Order of St. Augustin; and, in 1665, Francis DE

SALES, bishop of Geneva.

CLEMENT X. added to this ghostly list, in the year 1670, Pedro De Alcantara, a Franciscan monk; and Maria Magdalena Pactii, a Florentine num of the Carmelite Order; and, in the year 1671, Rose, an American Virgin, of the third Order of Dominic, and Lewis Bertrand, a Dominican monk.

Under the pontificate of INNOCENT XII., faintfhip was conferred upon CAJETAN of Vicenza, a regular clerk of the Order of Theatins, for whom that honour had been defigned twenty years before, by CLEMENT X., who died at the time the canonization was to have been performed; JOHN of Leon, a Hermit of St. Augustin; PASCHAL BAYLONIOS, a Franciscan monk of the kingdom of Arragon; and JOHN DE DIEU, a Portuguese, and one of the Order of the Brethren of Hospitality, all of whom had been marked for a place in the Kalendar, by ALEXANDER VIII., were folemnly canonized, in the year 1691, by INNOCENT XII. [2].

[z] The Diplomas of the pontifs, relative to all these canonizations, may be seen in Justus Fontaninus's Codex Constitutionum, quas summi Pontifics ediderum in foliami Canonizatione fanctorum, p. 260. published in folia at Rame, in the year 1729. As they contain the particular reasons which occasioned the elevation of these persons to a place in the Kalendar, and the peculiar kind of merit on which each of these ghostly promotions was founded, they offer abundant matter for reflection and censure to a judicious reader. Nor would it be labour ill employed to inquire, without prejudice or partiality, into the justice, piety, and truth of what the popes allege in these Diplomas, as the reasons inducing them to confer saintship on the persons therein mentioned.

 R_2

CHAP.

CHAP. II.

The HISTORY of the GREEK and ORIENTAL CHURCHES.

SECT. II. PART I.

Church.

CENT. I. HE history of the Greek and Eastern Secr. II. Christians, faithfully and accurately composed, would, no doubt, furnish us with a variety The flate of of entertaining and useful records; but the events that happen, and the transactions that are carried on in these distant regions, are very rarely transmitted to us genuine and uncorrupted. The fpirit of religious party, and the pious frauds it often engenders, want of proper information, and undiffinguishing credulity, have introduced a fabulous mixture into the accounts we have of the flate of the Christian religion in the East; and this confideration has engaged us to treat in a more concife manner, than would otherwife have been expedient, this particular branch of ecclefiaftical hiftory.

> The Greek church, whose wretched fituation was mentioned in the history of the preceding century, continued, during the prefent one, in the fame deplorable state of ignorance and decay, destitute of the means of acquiring or promoting folid and ufeful knowledge. This account is, however, to be confidered as taken from a general view of that church; for feveral of its members may be alleged as exceptions from this general character of ignorance, fuperstition, and corruption. Among that multitude of Greeks who travel into Sicily, Venice, Rome, England, Helland, and Germany, or carry on trade in their own country, or fill honourable and important posts in the court of the Turkish emperor, there are undoubtedly feveral, who are exempt from this reproach of ignorance and stupidity, of superstition perfition and profligacy, and who make a figure C ENT. by their opulence and credit [a]. But nothing can be more rooted and invincible than the aversion the Greeks in general discover to the Latin or Romish church; an aversion which neither promises nor threatenings, artifice nor violence, have been able to conquer, or even to temper or diminss, and which has continued insexible and unrelenting amidst the most zealous efforts of the Roman pontifs, and the various means employed by their numerous missionaries to gain over this people to their communion and jurisdiction [b].

[a] I have been led to these remarks by the complaints of ALEXANDER HELLADIUS, and others, who fee things in the light in which he has placed them. There is still extant a book published in Latin by this author, in the year 1714, entitled, The present state of the Greek Church, in which he throws out the bitterest reproaches upon several authors of eminent merit and learning, who have given accounts of that church, and maintains that his brethren of the Greek communion are much more pious, learned, wife, and opulent, than they are commonly supposed to be. Instead of envying the Greeks the merit and felicity which this panegyrift fuppofes them poffeffed of, we fincerely wish them much greater degrees of both. But we observe, at the same time, that, from the very accounts given by Helladius, it would be cafy to prove, that the state of the Greeks is not a whit better than it is generally supposed to be; though it may be granted, that the same ignorance, fuperatition, and immorality, do not abound alike in all places, nor among all perfons. See what we have remarked on this fubject in the accounts we have given of the Eastern church during the fixteenth century.

[b] The Jesuit Tarillon has given an ample relation of the numerous Missions in Greece and the other provinces of the Ottoman empire, and of the present state of these Missions, in his Letter to Pontchartraine, Sur Petat present des Missions des Pères Jesuies dans la Greec, which is published in the Nouveaux Memoires des Missions de la Campagnic de Jesus, tom. i. p. 1125. For an account of the state of the Romish religion in the islands of the Archipelago, see the letter of the Jesuit Xavier Portier, in the Lettres edifiantes et curiense écrites des Missions étrangeres, tom. x. p. 328. These accounts are, it is true, somewhat embellished, in order to advance the glory of the Jesuits: but the exaggerations of these missionaries may be easily corrected by the ac-

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PARTI.

It is true, indeed, that the Latin doctors have founded churches in some of the islands of the Archipelago; but these congregations are poor and inconsiderable; not will either the Greeks or their masters, the Turks, permit the Romish missionaries to extend further their spiritual jurisdiction.

The flory o Cyvillus Lucar.

II. Under the ponuncate of URBAN VIII., great hopes were entertained of foftening the antipathy of the Greeks against the Latin church [c], and of engaging them, and the other Christians of the East, to embrace the communion of Rome, and acknowledge the fupremacy and jurifdiction of its pontif. This was the chief object that excited the ambitious zeal and employed the affiduous labour and activity of URBAN, who called to his affifiance such ecclefiaftics as were most eminent for their acquaintance with Greek and Oriental learning, and with the tempers, manners, and characters of the Christians in those distant regions, that they might suggest the shortest and most effectual method of bringing them and their churches under the Roman yoke. The counts of other writers, who, in our times, have treated this branch of ecclefialtied hillory. See, above all others, R. Simon's (under the fictitious name of Santose) Bibliotheque (Critique, tom. I. c. xxiii. p. 340. and efpecially p. 346. where the author confirms a remarkable fact, which we have mentioned above upon the authority of Urban Cerri, viz. that amidt the general dillke which the Greeks have of the Romith church, none carry this diffike to fuch a high degree of antipathy and avertion, as those very Greeks who have been educated at Rome, or in the other schools and scalaries belonging to its spiritual jurisdiction. Its fint (says Father Sincos) les Premiers à crier contre et à medire du Pape et des Latins. Ces Pelerius Orientuus qui viennent chez nous fourteut et chissent de notre credulité pour acheter un benefice et tourmenter les missionaires Latins, &c. We have fill more recent and ample telimonies of the invincible hatted of the Greeks towards the Latins, in the Prefine to Cowell's Recount of the profest Greek Charek, printed at Combridge, in the year 1723.

The hopes of an union between the Greek and Latin churches entirely dispelled.

[a] See the Lite of Morrinus, which is prefixed to his Anti-

quitates Ecclef. Orient. p. 37.

wifest of these counsellors advised the pontif to lay CENT. it down for a preliminary in this difficult negocia- SECT. H. tion, that the Greek and Eastern Christians were PART I. to be indulged in almost every point that had hitherto been refused them by the Romish missionaries, and that no alteration was to be introduced either into their ritual or doctrine; that their ceremonies were to be tolerated, fince they did not concern the effence of religion; and that their doctrine was to be explained and understood in fuch a manner, as might give it a near and striking refemblance of the doctrine and institutions of the church of Rome. In defence of this method of proceeding, it was judiciously observed, that the Greeks would be much more tractable and obsequious, were they told by the missionaries, that it was not meant to convert them; that they had always been Roman-catholics in reality, though not in profession; and that the popes had no intention of perfuading them to abandon the doctrine of their ancestors, but only defired that they would understand it in its true and genuine fense. This plan gave rife to a variety of laborious productions, in which there was more learning than probity, and more dexterity than candour and good faith. Such were the treatifes published by LEO ALLATIUS, MORINUS, CLEMENT GALANUS, LUCAS HOLSTENIUS, ABRA-HAM ECHELLENSIS $\lceil d \rceil$, and others, who pretended [d] The book of LEO ALLATIUS, De Concordia Ecclesia Orientalis & Occidentalis, is well known, and defervedly looked upon, by the most learned men among the Protestants, as the work of a difingenuous and infidious writer. The Gracia Orthodoxa of the fame author, which was published at Rome in the year 1652, in 4to, and contains a compilation from all the books of the Grecian doctors that were well affected to the Latin church, is still extant. We have nothing of Lucas HOLSTENIUS (who was superior to Allatius in learning and fagacity) upon this fubject, except two posthumous dif-R 4.

ZVII. Sect. II. PART I.

CENT. ed to demonstrate, that there was little or no difference between the religion of the Greeks, Armenians, and Nestorians, and that of the church of Reme, a few ceremonies excepted, together with fome unufual phrases and terms that are peculiar to the Christians of the East.

This defign of bringing, by artful compliances, the Greek and Eastern churches under the jurisdiction of Rome was opposed by many; but by none with more resolution and zeal than by Cyrillus LUCAR, patriarch of Constantinople, a man of extenfive learning and knowledge of the world, who had travelled through a great part of Europe, and was well acquainted with the doctrine and discipline both of the Protestant and Romish churches. This prelate declared openly, and indeed with more courage than prudence, that he had a strong propenfity to the religious fentiments of the English and Dutch churches, and had conceived the defign of reforming the doctrine and ritual of the Greeks, and bringing them nearer to the purity and fimplicity of the Gospel. This was sufficient to render the venerable patriarch odious to the friends of Rome. And accordingly the Jesuits, seconded fertations, De ministro et forma sacramenti confirmationis apud Gracos, which were published at Rome in the year 1666 .- The treatifis of Morinus, De panitentia et ordinationibus, are known to all the learned, and feem expressly composed to make the world believe, that there is a striking uniformity of fentiment between the Greek and Latin churches on thefe two important points, when, laying afide the difference that scholastic terms and peculiar modes of expression may appear to occasion, we attend to the meaning that is annexed to these terms by the members of the two communions .- GALANUS, in a long and laborious work, published at Rome in the year 1650, has endeavoured to prove, that the Armenians differ very little from the Latins in their religious opinions; and ABRAHAM ECHEL-LEXSIS has attempted to convince us in several treatises (and more especially in his Animadversiones ad Hebed. Jesu Catalogum librorum Chaldaicorum), that all Christians throughout Africa and If have the same system of doctrine that is received among the Latins.

SECT. II.

PART 1.

by the credit and influence of the French ambaf- c ENT. fador, and affifted by the treacherous stratagems of fome perfidious Greeks, continued to perplex and perfecute the good man in various ways, and at length accomplished his ruin; for, by the help of falle witnesses, they obtained an accusation of treason against him; in consequence of which he was put to death, in the year 1638, by the order of the Emperor [e]. He was fucceeded by Cy-RILLUS, Bishop of Berca, a man of a dark, malignant, and violent spirit, and the infamous inftrument the Jesuits had chiefly employed in bringing him to an untimely end. As this new patriarch declared himself openly in favour of the Latins, the reconciliation of the Greeks with the church of Rome feemed more probable than ever, nay almost certain $\lceil f \rceil$; but the difinal fate of this [e] The Confession of Faith, drawn up by Cyrillus Lucar, was published in Holland in the year 16.15; and is also inserted by Aymon, in his Monumens authentiques de la Religion des Grees, p. 237. By this confession, it appears evidently, that CYRILLUS had a stronger inclination towards the doctrine of the reformed churches, than to that which was commonly received among the Greeks. Nor was he, by any means, illaffected towards the Lutherans, fince he addressed feveral letters to the Swedish clergy about this time, and folicited their friendship, as appears from the learned ARKENHOLTZ's Memoires de la Reine CHRISTINE, tom. i. p. 486. tom. ii. Append. p. 113.—Aymon has published, in the work already mentioned, p. 1-109. twenty-feven Letters of this Patriarch to the Clergy of Geneva, and to other Doctors of the Reformed Church, in which his religious fentiments are still more plainly discovered. His life, transactions, and deplorable fate, have been recorded by THOMAS SMITH, a learned divine of the English Church, in his Narratio de Vitá, Studiis, Gestis, et Martyrio Cyrilli Lucaris, which is the third article of his Miscellanea, published at London in Svo, in the year 1686; as also by Hottinger, in his Analest. Historico-Theolog. Appendic. differt. viii. p. 550. and by other authors mentioned by FABRICIUS in his Bibliotheca Graca, vol. x. p. 499.

[f] See Elik Vegelii Defensio Exerc. de Ecclesia Graca, p. 300. where we find the letters of the Roman pontif URBAN VIII. to CYRILLUS of Berea, in which he loads with applaufe

XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

CENT. this unworthy prelate dispelled all of a sudden the pleasing hopes and the anxious fears with which Rome and its adversaries beheld the approach of this important event. The fame violent death that had concluded the days of Cyrillus Lucar purfued his fuccessor, in whose place PARTHENIUS, a zealous oppofer of the doctrine and ambitious pretentions of Rome, was raifed to the patriarchal dignity. After this period, the Roman pontifs defisted from their attempts upon the Greek church, no favourable opportunity being offered either of deposing its patriarchs, or gaining them over to the Romish communion.

Whether or not the Romilh doctors and miffionaries contributed to the corruption of the docrrine of the Greek church.

III. Notwithstanding these unsuccessful attempts of the Roman pontifs to reduce the Greek church under their dominion, many allege, and more especially the reformed clergy complain, that the doctrine of that church has been manifeftly corrupted by the emissaries of Rome. supposed, that, in later times, the munificence of the French ambassadors at the Port, and the perfualive fophiltry of the Jesuits, have made such irrefiftible impressions on the avarice and ignorance of the Greek bishops, whose poverty is great, that they have departed, in feveral points, from the religious fystem of their ancestors, and have adopted, among other errors of the Romish church, the monstrous and unnatural doctrine of Transubstantiation. This change is said to have been more especially brought about in the famous council, which was affembled, in the year this new patriarch, for having been to instrumental in banishing from among the Greeks the pernicious errors of Cyrillus Lucar, and warmly exhorts him to depose all the Greek patriarchs and bishops that are not favourable to the Latin Church. These exhortations are seconded by flattering promiles, and, particularly, by an affurance of protection and fue-cour from the King of Spain. Cyrllus of Borea died in the communion of the Romith Church. See Hen. HILLARII Not. ad Phil. Cyprii Chron. Ecclefia Graca, p. 470.

1672,

1672, at Jerufalem, by Dositheus, the patriarch of N. T. of that city [g]. Without entering into an exa- XVII. mination of the truth and equity of this charge PART I. brought against the Greek bishops, we shall only observe, that it was the controversy between the Roman Catholics and Protestants in France that first gave rise to it. The latter, and more especially John CLAUDE, so justly celebrated for his extensive learning and masterly eloquence, maintained, that many of the doctrines of the Romille church, and more particularly that of Tranfubitantiation, were of a modern date, and had never been heard of before the ninth century. The Roman Catholics, on the contrary, with ARNAUD at their head, affirmed, that the doctrine of Rome concerning the Eucharist, and the real conversion of the bread and wine into the body and blood of CHRIST in that holy ordinance, had been received by Christians in all ages of the church [b]. To strengthen their cause further by authorities, that they imagined would have no fmall influence upon their adverfaries, they ventured to affert, that this doctrine was adopted by all the Eastern Christians, and particularly by the Greek churches [7].

[[]g] See, for an account of this council, Aymon, Memoires Authentiques de la Religion des Grees, tom. i. p. 263 .- Gis-BERTI CUPERI Epiflola, p. 404. 407 .- See, more especially, the judicious and learned observations of BASNAGE on the tranfactions of this council, in his Hiftoire de la Religion des Eglifes Reformées, periodiv. p. 1. c. xxxii. p. 452. and Cow-ELL's Account of the Present State of the Greek Church, book i. ch. v. p. 136.

^{([}b] It was to prove this most groundless affertion, that the famous Nicolle, published his artful book, De la Perpétuité de la Foi, in the year 1664, which was answered, with a victorious force of evidence, by the learned CLAUDE.

[[]i] The names and productions of the principal writers that appeared in this controverly, may be found in the Bibliotheca Graca of Fabricius, vol.x. p. 444. and in the learned Prafi's Differtatio contr. Ludov. Logerii Upus Euchariflicum, published at Tubingen in the year 1718.

CENT XVII. SECT. II. PART I.

This bold affertion required firiking and authentic testimonies to give it any degree of credit. Accordingly the ambassador of France, residing at Constantinople, received orders from his court to concur with the Jesuits, and to leave no methods unemployed in procuring certificates from the Greek clergy to confirm this affertion. On the other hand, the English and Dutch ambassadors, perfuaded that no fuch doctrine was really professed in the Greek church, procured also the testimonies of feveral ecclefiastics, in order to take from the Roman Catholic disputants this pretext; which, after all, was of no great confequence, as it did not affect the merits of the cause. The refult, however, of this fcrutiny was favourable to the Romish doctors, whose agents in foreign parts procured a more numerous lift of testimonies than their adverfaries could produce. The Protestants invalidated these testimonies, by proving fully, that many of them were obtained by bribery from the indigent Greeks, whose deplorable poverty made them facrifice truth to lucre; and that a great number of them were drawn by artifice from ignorant priests, whom the lesuits deceived, by difguifing the doctrines of Rome in fuch a manner as to give them a Grecian air, and make them refemble the religious fystem of the Eastern churches $\lceil k \rceil$. Granting all this to be true, it may nevertheless be justly questioned, whether the admission of certain doctrines in the Greek church, that refembled the errors of Popery, is to be dated from the period now before us; and whoever examines this controverfy with a fpirit CENT. of impartiality, accompanied with a competent SECT. II. knowledge of the history of the religious doctrine PART 1. of the Greek churches, will perhaps find, that a certain vague and obscure notion, similar to the Romish doctrine of Transubstantiation, has been received during many ages by feveral of thefe churches; though, in these latter times, they may have learnt, from the Romish missionaries, the Popish manner of expressing this monstrous and unaccountable tenet [/].

^[1] Here, above all other histories, the reader will do well to confult Cowell's Account of the Prefint State of the Greek Church, Pref. p. 2. and also book i. ch. v. p. 136. as this autitor was actually at Conflantinople when this feene of fraud and bribery was carried on, and was an eye-witness of the insidious arts and pendious practices employed by the Jesuits to obtain from the Greek priests and monks testimonics in savour of the doctrine of the Latin or Romish church.

IV. Of those independent Greek churches, The Rufwhich are governed by their own laws, and are gan church. not subject to the jurisdiction of the patriarch of Constantinople, there is none but the church established in Russia that can furnish any matter for an ecclefiaftical historian; the rest are sunk in the most deplorable ignorance and barbarity that can possibly be imagined. About the year 1666, a certain fect, which assumed the name of Ilbraniki, i. e. the Multitude of the Elect, but were called by their adversaries, Roskolfnika, or the seditious Faction, arose in Russia, and excited confiderable tumults and commotions in that kingdom [m]. The reasons that this fect alleges in defence of its feparation from the Russian church, are not as yet known with any degree of certainty; nor have we any fatisfactory or accurate account of its doctrines and inflitutions $\lceil n \rceil$; we only know, in ge-

[1] The learned LA CROZE, who cannot be suspected of any propenfity to favour the cause of Rome in general, or that of the Jefuits in particular, was of opinion, that the Greeks had been long in possession of the foolith doctrine of Transub-See Gisberti Cuperi Epifol. p. 37. 44. 48. 51. 65.

[m] Thefe, perhaps, are the fame perfons of whom the learned GMELIN speaks, under the denomination of STEROW-ERZI, in the account of his Voyage into Siberia, tom. iv.

[n] This fect is called by other authors the fect of the Rofkolniki. According to the account of VOLTAIRE, who SECT. II. PARTI.

CENT. neral, that its members affect an extraordinary air of piety and devotion, and complain of the corruptions introduced into the ancient religion of the Russians, partly by the negligence, and partly by the ambition, of the Episcopal Order [0]. On the other hand, great pains were taken to conquer the obstinacy of this factious fect; arguments, promifes, threatenings, dragoonings, the authority of fynods and councils, feconded by racks and gibbets; in a word, all the methods > pretends to have drawn the materials of his Hiftory of the Ruffran Empire under PETER I., from authentic records furnished by the court of Petersburg, this fect made its first appearance in the twelfth century. The members of it allege, in defence of their feparation, the corruptions, both in doctrine and discipline, that have been introduced into the Russian Church. They profess a rigorous zeal for the Letter of Holy Scripture, which they do not understand; and the transposition of a fingle word in a new edition of the Russian Bible, though this transposition was made to correct an uncouth phrase in the translation commonly received, threw them into the greatest combustion and tumult. They will not allow a priest to adminifler baptism after having tasted spirituous liquor; and in this, perhaps, they do not amifs, fince it is well known, that the Ruffian priefts feldom touch the flask without drinking deep. They hold, that there is no fubordination of rank, no fuperior or inferior, among the faithful; that a Christian may kill himself for the love of Christ; that Hallelujah must be but twice pronounced; and that it is a great fin to repeat it thrice: and that a priest must never give a bleffing but with three fingers. They are regular, even to aufterity, in their manners; but as they have always refused to admit Christians of other denominations into their religious affemblies, they have been suspected of committing in them various abominations, which ought not to be believed without the ftrongest and most demonstrative proof. They are accused, for example, of killing a child in these affemblies, and of drinking its blood, and of lascivious commerce in its most irregular forms.

> [0] See Bergius, De Statu Ecclesia Religionis Muscovitica, fect. xi. cap. vii. p. 69. fect. ii. cap. xvi. p. 218.—Append. 270 .- HEINECCIUS'S Account of the Greek Church, written in German, p. 30.—HAVEN'S Iter Russieum.—Some doctors conjecture, that these Ishraniki, or Roskolniki, are a branch defeended from the ancient Bogomilians, of whom we have already given fome account, cent. xii. part ii. chap. v. f ii.

that artifice or barbarity could fuggest were practified to bring back these feditious heretics into SECT. II. the bosom of the church. But the effect of these PART I. violent measures by no means answered the expectations of the Ruffian government; they exafperated, instead of reclaiming, these schismatics, who retired into the woods and defarts, and, as it often happens, were rendered more fierce and defperate by the calamities and fufferings in which they were involved. From the time that PETER the Great ascended the throne of Ruffia, and made fuch remarkable changes in the form and administration both of its civil and ecclesiastical government, this faction has been treated with more humanity and mildness; but it is alleged, that these mild proceedings have by no means healed the fchifm; and that, on the contrary, the Roskolniki have gained strength, and are become still more obstinate since the period now mentioned.

V. It will not be improper here to give fome The change account of this reformation of the church of Ruf- introduced into the fia, that was owing to the active zeal and wisdom Russian of Peter I.; for though this interesting event church by belongs to the history of the following century, yet the scheme, by which it was brought about, was laid towards the conclusion of that now before us. This great prince made no change in the articles of faith received among the Ruffians, and which contain the doctrine of the Greek church. But he took the utmost pains to have this doctrine explained in a manner conformable to the dictates of right reason and the spirit of the Gospel; and he used the most effectual methods to destroy, on the one hand, the influence of that hideous feperflition that fat brooding over the whole nation; and, on the other, to dispel the ignorance of the clergy, which was incredible, and that of the people, which would have furpaffed it, had that 22

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART I. been possible. These were great and arduous undertakings; and the reformation, to which they pointed, was fuch as feemed to require whole ages to accomplish and bring to any tolerable degree of perfection. To accelerate the execution of this glorious plan, Peter I. became a zealous protector and patron of arts and sciences. He encouraged, by various instances of munificence, men of learning and genius to fettle in his dominions. He reformed the schools that were funk in ignorance and barbarifm, and erected new feminaries of learning. He endeavoured to excite in his fubjects a defire of emerging from their ignorance and brutality, and a taffe for knowledge and the ufeful arts. And, to crown all these noble attempts, he extinguished the infernal spirit of persecution; abolished the penal laws against those that differed merely in religious opinion from the established church; and granted to Christians of all denominations liberty of conscience, and the privilege of performing divine worship in the manner prescribed by their respective liturgies and institutions. This liberty, however, was modified in fuch a prudent manner, as to restrain and defeat any attempts that might be made by the Latins to promote the interests of Popery in Russia, or to extend the jurisdiction of the Roman pontif beyond the chapels of that communion that were tolerated by law. For though Roman Catholics were allowed places for the celebration of divine worship, yet the Jesuits were not permitted to exercise the functions of missionaries or public teachers in Russia; and a particular charge was given to the council, to which belonged the cognizance of ecclefialtical affairs, to use their utmost care and vigilance to prevent the propagation of Romish tenets among the people. Befides

Besides all this, a notable change was now in- CENT. troduced into the manner of governing the church. SECT. II. The fplendid dignity of patriarch, which ap- PART I. proached too near the lustre and prerogatives of majesty, not to be offensive to the emperor and burthensome to the people, was suppressed, or rather affumed, by this spirited prince, who declared himself the supreme pontif and head of the Russian church [p]. The functions of this high and important office were intrusted with a council affembled at Peterfburg, which was called the Holy Synod, and in which one of the archibifbass, the most distinguished by his integrity and prudence, was appointed as prefident. This honourable office was filled by the famous STEPHEN JAvorsci, who composed a laborious work, in the Russian language, against herefy [q]. The other orders of the clergy continued in their respective rank and offices; but both their revenues and their authority were confiderably diminished. It was refolved at first, in this general reformation, to abolish all monasteries and convents, as prejudicial to the community, and unfriendly to population; but this refolution was not put in execu-

[q] LEQUIEN, Oriens Christianus, tom. i. p. 1295.

This account is not perhaps entirely accurate. Dr. Mosheim feems to infinuate, that Peter affamed not only the authority, but also the office and title of patriarch or supreme pontif, and head of the church. This, however, was not the case; he retained the power without the title, as may be seen by the oath that every member of the fynod he had established was obliged to take, when he was appointed to that office. It was in consequence of his authority, as emperor, that he claimed an absolute authority in the church, and not from any ghoshly character or denomination. The oath now mentioned ran thus: I fewer and promise to be a saithful and ebeckent subject and fervant to my true and natural fracting, and to the angust faccifors it shall please him to explaint the juressign to the crown. I carbonaldge him as the figure judge of this spiritual college, &c., See Voutnater's Histoire de l'Empire de Russe fous Pierre le Grand, tom. i. p. 174.

CENT. tion; on the contrary, the emperor himself erect- $_{XVII.}^{XVII.}$ ed a magnificent monastery in honour of AlexPart I. Ander Newsky, whom the Russians place in the list of their heroes $\lceil r \rceil$.

The state of the Monophysites.

VI. A small body of the Monophysites in Asia abandoned, for fome time, the doctrine and inflitutions of their ancestors, and embraced the communion of Rome. This step was entirely owing to the fuggestions and intrigues of a person named Andrew Achigian, who had been educated at Rome, where he imbibed the principles of Popery, and, having obtained the title and dignity of patriarch from the Roman pontif, affumed the denomination of IGNATIUS XXIV. [s]. After the death of this pretended patriarch, another usurper, whose name was PETER, aspired after the fame dignity, and, taking the title of Ic-NATIUS XXV., placed himself in the patriarchal chair; but the lawful patriarch of the feet had credit enough with the Turks to procure the deposition and banishment of this pretender; and thus the finall congregation which acknowledged his jurisdiction was entirely dispersed $\lceil t \rceil$. The African Monophyfites, and more especially the Copis, notwithstanding that poverty and ignorance which exposed them to the feductions of fophistry

[/] Those who are acquainted with either the Danish or German languages, will find several interesting anecdotes relating to these changes in HAVEN's Iter Rufficum.

[5] From the fifteenth century downwards, all the patriarchs of the Monophyster have taken the name of Ignatus, and that for no other reason than to shew that they are the lineal successor of Ignatus, who was bishop of Antioch in the first century, and of consequence the lawful patriarchs of Antioch. A like reason induces the religious chief of the Maronites, who also lays claim to the same dignity, to assume the name of Pliter; for St. Peter is faid to have governed the church of Antioch before Ignatius.

[1] JO. SIMON. ASSEYANNI Biblioth. Orientalis, Clementino-Vocican. ton., ii. p. 482, and his Differt. de Monophyfitis, § iii.

р. б, 7.

and gain, stood firm in their principles, and made C ENT. an obstinate resistance to the promises, presents, SECT.II. and attempts, employed by the papal millionaries PARTI. to bring them under the Roman yoke.-With respect to the Abyssinians, we have mentioned already, in its proper place, the revolution by which they delivered themselves from that tyrannical yoke, and refumed the liberty they had fo imprudently renounced. It is proper, however, to take notice here of the zeal discovered by the Lutherans, in their attempts to difpel the ignorance and fuperstition of this people, and to bring them to the knowledge of a purer religion, and a more rational worship. It was with this pious defign that the learned HEYLING, of Lubec, undertook a voyage into Ethiopia in the year 1634, where he refided many years, and acquired fuch a distinguished place in the favour and esteem of the emperor, that he was honoured with the high and important office of prime minister of that mighty empire. In this eminent station, he gave many instances of his zeal both for the interests of religion and the public good; after which he fet out for Europe, but never arrived there, nor is it known in what manner, or by what accident, he ended his days $\lceil u \rceil$.

Several years after this, ERNEST, Duke of Saxe-Gotha, furnamed the Pious, on account of his eminent fanctity and virtue, formed the refolution of making a new attempt to fpread the knowledge of the Gofpel, in its purity and fimplicity, among the ignorant and fuperfittious Abyfinians. This defign was formed by the counfels and fuggestions of the famous Ludolph, and was to have been executed by the ministry of Abbot Gregory, an [[]u] A very curious life of Heyling was published in German by Dr. Michaelis at Hall, in 1724.—See also Molleri Cimbria Literata, tem. i. p. 253.

PART I.

CENT. Abyffinian, who had refided for fome time in Eu-XVII. The unhappy fate of this missionary, who perished in a shipwreck in the year 1657, did not totally discourage the prince from purfuing his purpole; for, in the year 1663, he entrusted the fame pious and important commission with John Michael Wansleb, a native of Erfurt, to whom he gave the wifest orders, and whom he charged particularly to leave no means unemployed that might contribute to give the Abyflinian nation a favourable opinion of the Germans, as it was upon this basis alone that the success of the present enterprize could be built. WANSLEB, however, whose virtue was by no means equal to his abilities, instead of continuing his journey to Abyssinia, remained several years in Egypt. On his return from thence into Europe, he began to entertain uneafy apprehensions of the account that would naturally be demanded both of his conduct, and of the manner in which he had employed the fums of money he received for his Abyffinian expedition. These apprehensions rendered him desperate, because they were attended with a coniciousness of guilt. Hence, instead of returning into Germany, he went directly to Rome, where, in the year 1667, he embraced, at least in outward profession, the doctrine of that church, and entered into the Dominican Order [x]. Thus the pious defigns of the best of princes failed in the execution. To them, however, we are indebted for the great light that has been thrown by the learned and laborious LUDOLPH on the history,

[w] See LUDOLPHI Proëmium ad Comm. in Hist. Æthiop.

p. 31.—JUNCKERI Vita JOBI LUDDIPHI, p. 68.
[N] For an account of this inconftant and worthless, but learned man, for Lono, Voyage d'Abyl. tom. i. p. 198. 227. 233. 248.—CYPRIAN. Catalog. MSS. Biblioth. Gothana, p. 64. Eus. RENAUDOT, Pref. ad Hiftor. Patriarch. Alexand. ECHARD and Quetir, Scriptor. Ordin. Pradic. tom. ii. p. 693. See the same authors, Historia Ecclesia Alexandrina. doctrine, doctrine, literature, and manners, of the Abyssi- CENT. nians, which, before this period, were but very SECT. II.

fuperficially known in Europe.

VII. The state of the Christians in Armenia The state of underwent a confiderable change foon after the the Almecommencement of this century, in confequence of the incursions of ABBAS the Great, King of Persia, into that province. This prince laid waste all that part of Armenia that lay contiguous to his dominions, and ordered the inhabitants to retire into Perfia. These devastations were designed to prevent the Turks from approaching to his frontier; for the Eastern monarchs, instead of erecting fortified towns on the borders of their refpective kingdoms, as is done by the European princes, laid waste their borders upon the approach of the enemy, that, by thus cutting off the means of their fubfiftence, their progress might be either entirely flopped, or confiderably retarded. In this general emigration, the more opulent and better fort of the Armenians removed to Ilpahan, the capital of Perfia, where the generous monarch granted them a beautiful fuburb for their refidence, with the free exercise of their religion, under the jurisdiction of a bishop or patriarch. Under the reign of this magnanimous prince, who cherished his people with a paternal tenderness, these happy exiles enjoyed the sweets of liberty and abundance; but after his death the fcene changed, and they were involved in calamities of various kinds [y]. The storm of perfecution that arose upon them shook their constancy; many of them apollatifed to the Mahometan religion, fo that it was justly to be feared that this branch of the Armenian church would gradually perish. On the other hand, the state of religion

[[]y] See CHARDIN, Voyages en Perfe, tom. ii. p. 106.—GA-BRILL DU CHINON, Nouvelles Relations du Lewant, p. 206.

SECT. IL PART I.

CENT, in that church derived confiderable advantages from the fettlement of a prodigious number of Armenians in different parts of Europe for the purposes of commerce. These merchants, who had fixed their refidence, during this century, at London, Amsterdam, Marseilles, and Venice [z], were not unmindful of the interests of religion in their native country. And their fituation furnished them with favourable opportunities of exerting their zeal in this good cause, and particularly of fupplying their Afiatic brethren with Armenian translations of the Holy Scriptures, and of other theological books, from the European preffes, especially from those of England and Holland. These pious and instructive productions being disperfed among the Armenians, who lived under the Perfian and Turkish governments, contributed, no doubt, to preferve that illiterate and fuperflitious people from falling into the most confummate and deplorable ignorance.

The flate of the Neftorians.

VIII. The divisions that reigned among the Nestorians in the preceding century still subsisted; and all the methods that had been employed to heal them proved hitherto ineffectual. Some of the Nesterian bishops discovered a propensity to accommodate matters with the church of Kome. ELIAS II., bishep of Mosul, sent two private embassies to the Pope, in the year 1607 and 1610, to solicit his friendship; and, in the letter he addreffed upon that eccasion to PAUL IV., declared

^[2] For an account of the Armenians who fettled at Marfilles, and of the books they took care to have printed in that city for the use of their brethren in foreign parts, see Rich. Simon's Lettres Cheifies, tom. ii. p. 137.—The fame author (tom. iv. p. 160.), and the learned John Joachim Schroder, in a Differtation prefixed to his Thefastus Lingua Armenica, give an account of the Armenian bible that was printed in Holland. The latter also takes notice of the other Armenian books that were published at Venice, Lyons, and Limflerdam, loc. cit. cap. ii. $ xxv. p. 38.

his defire to bring about a reconciliation between CENT. the Nestorians and the Latin church [a]. ELIAS SECT. II. III., though at first extremely averse to the doc- PART I. trine and institution of that church, changed his fentiments in this respect; and, in the year 1657, addressed a letter to the congregation De propaganda Fide, in which he intimated his readiness to ioin with the church of Rome, on condition that the Pope would allow the Nestorians a place of public worship in that city, and would abstain from all attempts to alter the doctrine or discipline of that feet $\lceil b \rceil$. The Romish doctors could not but perceive that a reconciliation, founded on fuch conditions as these, would be attended with no advantage to their church, and promifed nothing that could flatter the ambition of their pontif. And accordingly we do not find that the propofal above mentioned was accepted. It does not appear that the Nestorians were received, at this time, into the communion of the Romish Church, or that the bishops of Mosul were, after this period, at all folicitous about the friendship or good-will of the Roman pontif. The Nestorian bithops of Ormus, who fuccessively assume the name of Simeon, proposed also, more than once $\lceil c \rceil$, plans of reconciliation with the church of Rome; and, with that view, fent the Roman pontif a confession of their faith, that gave a clear idea of their religious tenets and institutions. But these proposals were little attended to by the court of Rome, which was either owing to its diflike of the doctrine of these Nestorians $\lceil d \rceil$, or to that contempt which their poverty and want of influence

[[]a] Jos. Sim. Assemanni Biblioth. Orient, Clement. Valican. tom. i. p. 543. tom. ii. p. 457. tom. iii. p. i. p. 650.

[[]b] Assemanni loc. cit. tom. iii. p. 2. [c] In the years 1619 and 1653.

[[]d] Assemanni loc. cit. tom. i. p. 531. tom. ii. p. 457. tom. iii. p. i. p. 622.

PART1.

CENT. excited in the pontifs, whose ambition and avi-SECT. II. dity aimed at acquiftions of more confequence; for it is well known, that, fince the year 1617, the bishops of Ormus have been in a low and declining state, both in point of opulence and credit, and are no longer in a condition to excite the envy of their brethren at Moful [e]. The Romish missionaries gained over, nevertheless, to their communion, a handful of Nestorians, whom they formed into a congregation or church, about the middle of this century. The bishops or patriarchs of this little flock refide in the city of Amida, or Diarbeker, and all assume the denomination of ICSEPH [f]. The Nefterians, who inhabit the coasts of Malabar, and are called the Christians of St. Thomas, fuffered innumerable vexations, and the most grievous perfecution, from the Romish priests, and more especially the Jesuits, while there fettlements were in the hands of the Portuguese; but neither artifice nor violence could engage them to embrace the communion of Rome [g]. But when Cochin was taken by the Dutch, in the year 1663, and the Portuguese were driven out of these quarters, the persecuted Nestorians resumed their primitive liberty, and were reinstated in the privilege of ferving God without moleftation, according to their confciences. These bloffings they fill continue to enjoy; nor are fuch of them as entered into the communion of Rome disturbed by the Dutch, who are used to treat with toleration and inhulgence all fects who live peaceably will those who differ from them in religious opinions and ceremonies.

[[]c] Pet. Strozza, Prof. ad librum de Chaldeorum degma-tilus.

[[]f] See Lequien. Oriens Chriftianus, tom. ii. p. 1078. [g] Le Croze Hifloire du Chriftonijme des Indes, livr. v.

p. 144. [b] Schouten Voyage aux Indes Crient. tom. i. p. 319. 446.

SECTION II.

PART II.

The History of the Modern Churches.

CHAP. I.

The History of the Lutheran Church.

I. The calamities and C ENT, vexations the Lutheran church fuffered Sect. II. from the perfecuting spirit of the Roman pontifs, and the intemperate zeal of the house of Austria, The Luthewhich, on many occasions, shewed too great a propermity to fecond their ambitious and defpotic in tome measures; we shall therefore, at present, confine Places. The our view to the loffes it fullained from other embrace quarters. The cause of Lutheranism suffered confiderably by the defertion of MAURICE, Landgrave of Helle, a prince of uncommon genius and learning, who not only embraced the doctrine and distribute of the Reformed church $\lceil b \rceil$, but also, in the year 1604, removed the Lutheran profesiors from their places in the University of Marpurg, and the doctors of that communion from the churches they had in his dominions. MAURICE, after taking this vigorous step, on account of the oblinacy with which the Lutheran clergy opposed

[a] In the Elfory of the Romift Church.—See above. [b] The reader must always remember, that the writers of the continent generally use the denomination of Reformed in a limited fenfe, to diffinguish the church of England and the Calvinifical churches from those of the Lutheran perfunsion.

PART II.

ran cherch lef seround

Calvinuím.

CENT. SECT. II.

his defign, took particular care to have his fubjects instructed in the doctrine of the Helvetic PART II. church, and introduced into the Hessian churches the form of public worship that was observed at Geneva. This plan was not executed without fome difficulty; but it acquired a complete degree of stability and confishence in the year 1619, when deputies were fent by this prince to the fynod of Dort, in Holland, with express orders to confent, in the name of the Hessian churches, to ail the acts that should be passed in that assembly. The doctors of the Reformed church, who lived at this period, defended strenuously the measures followed by MAURICE, and maintained, that in all these transactions he observed the strictest principles of equity, and discovered an uncommon foirit of moderation. Perhaps the doctors of modern days may view this matter in a different point of light. They will acknowledge, perhaps, without hefitation, that if this illustrious prince had been more influenced by the fentiments of the wifest of the Reformed doctors, concerning the conduct we ought to observe towards those who differ from us in religious matters, and less by his own will and humour, he would have ordered many things otherwise than he actually did $\lceil c \rceil$.

The new reformation takes place in Brandenburg.

II. The example of the Landgrave of Heffe was followed, in the year 1614, by John Sigismund, [c] The reader will find a more ample account of this matter in the controversial writings of the divines of Cassel and Dermsladt, published at Coffel, Marpurg, and Gieffen, in the years 1632, 1636, 1647; and of which SALIG speaks largely in his Hist. Aug. Confest. tom. i. lib. iv. cap. ii. p. 756. Those who understand the German language, may also consult GARTH'S Historischer Bericht von dem Religions Wesen in Furftenthum Heffen, 1706, in 4to .- CYPRIAN'S Unterricht von Kirchlicher Vereinigung der Protestanten, p. 263. & Appendix, p. 101.—As also the Alls published in the Unschuldigen Nach. richten, A. 1749. p. 25.

elector

elector of Brandenburg, who also renounced Lu- c FNT. theranism, and embraced the communion of the SECT. II. Reformed churches, though with certain restric- PART H. tions, and without employing any acts of mere authority to engage his fubjects in the same meafure. For it is observable, that this prince did not adopt all the peculiar doctrines of Calvinism. He introduced, indeed, into his dominions the form of public worship that was established at Geneva, and he embraced the fentiments of the Reformed churches concerning the Perfon of CHRIST, and the manner in which he is present in the eucharift, as they appeared to him much more conformable to reason and scripture than the doctrine of the Lutherans relating to these points. But, on the other hand, he refused to admit the Calvinistical doctrine of Divine Grace, and Absolute Decrees; and, on this account, neither fent deputies to the fynod of Dort, nor adopted the decisions of that famous affembly on these intricate subiects. This way of thinking was fo exactly followed by the fuccessors of Sicismund, that they never would allow the opinion of CALVIN, concerning the Divine Decrees, to be confidered as the public and received doctrine of the Reformed churches in their dominions. It must be particularly mentioned, to the honour of this wife prince, that he granted to his fubjects an entire liberty in religious matters, and left it to their unrestrained and free choice, whether they would remain in the profession of Lutheranism, or follow the example of their fovereign; nor did he exclude from civil honours and employments, or from the usual marks of his protection and favour. those who continued in the faith of their ancestors. This lenity and moderation, which feemed fo adapted to prevent jealoufy and envy, and to fatisfy both parties, did not however produce this cient

CENT. cient to reftrain within the bounds of decency and XVII.
SECT. H. charity feveral warm and inconfiderate votanics. PART II. Lutheranism. These over-zealous persons, who breathed the violent spirit of an age in which matters of confequence were usually carried on with vehemence and rigour, looked upon it as intolerable and highly provoking,-that the Lutherans and Calvinists should enjoy the same honours and prerogatives,—that all injurious terms and odious comparisons should be banished from religious debates-that the controverted points in theology should either be entirely omitted in the fermons and public difcourfes of the clergy, or explained with a fpirit of modesty and Christian charity,-that certain rites which displeased the Calvinists should be totally abolished, -and that they who differed in opinions, should be obliged to live in peace, concord, and the mutual exchange of good offices. If it was unreafonable in them to be offended at injunctions of this nature, it was still more so to discover their indignation, in a manner that excited not only fharp and uncharitable debates, but also civil commotions and violent tumults, that diffurbed confiderably the tranquillity of the state, and nourished a fpirit of fedition and revolt, which the labour of years was employed to extinguish in vain. In this troubled state of things, the divines of Saxony, and more especially those of Wittemberg, under-took to defend the Lutheran cause; but if it be acknowledged, on the one hand, that their views were good, and their intentions upright; it must be owned, on the other, that their style was keen even to a degree of licentiousness, and their zeal warm beyond all meafure. And indeed, as it generally happens, their want of moderation hurt, instead of promoting, the cause in which they had embarked; for it was in confequence of their violent proceedings, that the Form of Concord was fuppreffed pressed in the territories of Brandenburg, and the CENT. Subjects of that electorate prohibited, by a solemn Sect. H. edict, from studying divinity in the academy of PARTIL.

Wittemberg [d].

III. It was deplorable to fee two churches, Attempts which had difcovered an equal degree of pious nude of war is a call and fortitude in throwing off the defpotic union between the living in difcords that were highly detrimental to and Retermed the interests of religion, and the well-being of churches. fociety. Hence feveral eminent divines and leading men, both among the Lutherans and Calvinists, sought anxiously after some method of uniting the two churches, though divided in their opinions, in the bonds of Christian charity and ecclefiastical communion. A competent knowledge of human nature and human passions was fufficient to perfuade these wise and pacific mediators, that a perfect uniformity in religious opi-

[d] The edicts of Sigismund and his fucceffors, relating to this change in the state of religion in Brandenburg, have been feveral times republished in one collection. Besides these there are many books, treatifes, and pamphlets, which give an account of this remarkable transaction, and of which the reader will find a complete lift in the German work entitled, Unschuldigen Nachrichten, An. 1745, p. 34. A. 1746, p. 326. compared with Jo. CAROL. KOCHERI Bibliotheca Theologias Symbolice, p. 312.—The reader who defires to attain to a perfect acquaintance with this controverly, and to be able to weigh the merits of the cause, by having a true state of the case before him, will do well to consult Arnold Histor. Eccles. et Herel. p. ii. lib. xvii. c. vii. p. 965.—CYPRIAN'S Unterright von der Vereinigung der Prolessant, p. 75. and in Append. Monum. p. 225 .- Unfebuldigen Nuchrichien, A. 1729, p. 1067, et A. 1732, p. 715.—They who affirm that the elector's ultimate end, in changing the face of religion in his dominions, was not the profpect of augmenting and extending his authority, found their opinion rather on conjecture than on demonstration; nor do they confirm this aftertion by teltimonies that are fufficient to bring full conviction. It must, however, be acknowledged, on the other hand, that their conjectures have neither an abfurd nor an improbable afpect.

CENT. nions was not practicable, and that it would be entirely extravagant to imagine that any of these PARTIL communities could ever be brought to embrace univerfally, and without limitation, the doctrines of the other. They made it, therefore, their principal bufiness to perfuade those, whose foirits were inflamed with the heat of controversy, that the points in debate between the two churches were not effential to true religion; -that the fundamental doctrines of Christianity were received and professed in both communions; -and that the difference of opinion between the contending parties, turned either upon points of an abstrufe and incomprehensible nature, or upon matters of indifference, which neither tended to render mankind wifer nor better, and in which the interests of genuine piety were in no wife concerned. Those who viewed things in this point of light, were obliged to acknowledge, that the diverfity of opinions between the two churches was by no means a fufficient reason for their separation; and that of confequence they were called, by the dictates of that Gospel which they both professed, to live not only in the mutual exercise of Christian charity, but also to enter into the fraternal bonds of church communion. The greatest part of the Reformed doctors feemed disposed to acknowledge, that the errors of the Lutherans were not of a momentous nature, nor of a pernicious tendency; and that the fundamental doctrines of Christianity had not undergone any remarkable alteration in that communion; and thus on their fide an important step was made towards peace and union between the two churches. But the greatest part of the Lutheran doctors declared, that they could not form a like judgment with respect to the doctrine of the Reformed churches; they maintained tenaciously the importance of the points which divided the two communions, and affirmed, that a con-

SECT. II.

PART II.

a confiderable part of the controversy turned upon CENT. the fundamental principles of all religion and virtue. It is not at all furprifing, that this fleadinefs and constancy of the Lutherans was branded by the opposite party with the epithets of morose obstinacy, supercilious arrogance, and such like odious denominations. The Lutherans were not behind-hand with their adverfaries in acrimony of style; they recriminated with vehemence, and charged their accusers with instances of misconduct, different in kind, but equally condemnable. They reproached them with having dealt difingenuously, by difguising, under ambiguous expressions, the real doctrine of the Reformed churches; they observed further, that their adverfaries, notwithstanding their confummate prudence and circumspection, gave plain proofs, on many occasions, that their propensity to a reconciliation between the two churches arose from views of private interest, rather than from a zeal for the public good.

IV. Among the public transactions relative to Declaration the project of a union between the Reformed and of the lynod of Chancates, Lutheran churches, we must not omit mentioning the attempt made by JAMES I., king of Great Britain, to accomplish this falutary purpose, in the year 1615. The person employed for this end by the British monarch, was Peter Du Moulin, the most eminent among the Protestant doctors in France [e]; but this defign was neither carried. on with spirit, nor attended with fuccess $\lceil f \rceil$.

[[]e] See La Vassor, Hift. de Louis XIII. tom. ii. p. ii. D. 21.

[[]f] King James, who would have abandoned the most important and noble defign, at any time, to difcufs a point of grammar or theology, or to gain a point of interest for him-felf or his minions, neglected this union of the Lutheran and Reformed churches, which he had begun to promote with fuch an appearance of piety and zeal.

CENT. Another attempt of the same pacific nature was SECT. II. made in the year 1631, in the fynod of Charenton, in PART II. which an act was passed by the Reformed doctors of that respectable assembly, declaring the Lutheran fystem of religion conformable with the spirit of true piety, and free from pernicious and fundamental errors. By this act, a fair opportunity was offered to the Lutherans of joining with the Reformed church upon honourable terms, and of entering into the bonds both of civil and religious communion with their Calvinistical brethren [g]. But this candid and charitable proceeding was attended with very little fruit, fince few of the Lutherans were disposed to embrace the occasion that was here fo freely offered them, of terminating the diffentions that feparated the two churches. The fame year a conference was held at Leipfic between the Saxon doctors, Hoe, Lyser, and HOPFNER, on the one fide, and fome of the most eminent divines of Heffe-Caffel and Brandenburg, on the other; to the end that, by exposing with fidelity and precision their respective doctrines, it might be more eafily feen, what the real obstacles were that stood in the way of the union projected between the two churches. This conference was conducted with decency and moderation, and the deliberations were neither disturbed by intemperate zeal, nor by a proud spirit of contention and dispute; but that openness of heart, that mutual trust and confidence, which are so effential to the fuccess of all kinds of pacification, were wanting here. For though the doctors of the Reformed party exposed, with the utmost precision and fairness, the tenets of their church, and made, moreover, many concessions, which the Lutherans themselves could scarcely expect; yet the latter, CENT. fuspicious and fearful, and always apprehensive SECT.II. of schemes, formed by artifice under the mask of PART II. candour, to betray and enfnare them, did not dare to acknowledge, that they were fatisfied with these explications and offers; and thus the conference broke up without having contributed in any respect to promote the salutary work of peace [b]. To form a true idea of these pacific deliberations, of the reasons that gave rise to them, and of the principles by which they were conducted, it will be necessary to study the civil history of this interesting period with attention and care.

[[]g] Benoit, Histoire de l' Edit de Nantes, tom. ii. p. 544.-AYMON, Acres des Synodes Nationaux des Egisses Reformes, de France, tom. ii. p. 500.—ITTIGII Diff.rt. de Synodi Carento-niensis indulgentia erga Lutheranos, Lips. 1705, 4to.

V. ULADISLAUS IV., king of Poland, formed The cona fill more extensive plan of religious union than Thorn and those hitherto mentioned; he proposed a recon- Coffel, ciliation not only between the Reformed and Lutheran churches, but also between these two communions and that of Rome. For this purpose, he ordered a conference to be held at Thorn, in the year 1645, the iffue of which, as might naturally have been expected, was far from being favourable to the projected union; for the persons employed by the three churches to heal their divisions, or at least to calm their animosities, returned from this conference with a greater measure of party-zeal, and a smaller portion of Christian charity, than they had brought to it.

The conference held at Caffel in the year 1661, by the order of WILLIAM VI., Landgrave of Heffe, between Mus Eus and Henichius, profeffors at Rintelen, on the fide of the Lutherans, and

[[]b] TIMANNI GASSELII Historia Sacra et Ecclesiastica, p. ii. in addendis, p. 597-613. in which the Alls of this conference are published.—Jo. WOLFG. JAEGERI Historia Saculi xvii. Decenn. iv. p. 497. C. This testimony of Dr. Mosheim, who was himself a Lutheran, is singularly honourable to the Reformed doctors. I not lys so to kirmself. 91. If. Vol. V.

CENT. CURTIUS and HEINSIUS, of the university of Mar-SECT. II. purg, on that of the Reformed, was attended with PART II. much more fuccess; and, if it did not bring about a perfect uniformity of opinion, it produce what was much better, a spirit of Christian charity and forbearance. For these candid doctors, after having diligently examined the nature, and weighed the importance, of the controversies that divided the two churches, embraced each other with reciprocal marks of affection and efteem, and mutually declared that their respective doctrines were less different from each other than was generally imagined; and that this difference was not of fufficient moment to prevent their fraternal union and concord. But it happened unluckily, that these moderate doctors of Rintelen could not infuse the same spirit of peace and charity that animated them, into their Lutheran brethren, nor perfuade them to view the difference of opinion, that divided the Protestant churches, in the fame indulgent point of light in which they had confidered them in the conference at Cassel. On the contrary, this their moderation drew upon them the hatred of almost all the Lutherans; and they were loaded with bitter reproaches in a multitude of pamphlets [i], that were composed expressly to refute their fentiments, and to censure their conduct. The pains that were taken after this period by the princes of the house of Bran- C ENT. denburg, and more especially by Frederic Will- Sect. II. LIAM and his fon FREDERIC, in order to compose PART II. the diffentions and animofity that divide the Protestants, and particularly to promote a fraternal union between the Reformed and Lutheran churches in the Pruffian territories, and in the rest of their dominions, are well known: and it is also equally notorious, that innumerable difficulties were formed against the execution of this falutary defign.

[[]i] The writers who have given accounts of the conferences of Thorn and Caffel, are enumerated by SAGITTARIUS, in his Introd. ad Hist. Ecclefiast. tom. ii. p. 1604.—See also JAE-GERI Historia Saculi xvii. Decenn. v. p. 689. and Decenn. vii. p. 160. where the Acts of the conferences of Cassel and Thorn are extant.—Add to these, Jo. Alphons. Turretini Nubes Testinan pro moderato in rebus Theologicis judicio, p. 178.—There is an ample account of the conference of Caffel in the Life of Musæus given by Mollerus in his Cimbria Literata, tom. ii. p. 566. The reader will find in the same work, an accurate Irdex of the Accounts of this conference published on both f.des.

VI. Befides these public conferences, held by Explors of the authority of princes, in order to promote John Durence union and concord among Protestants, a multitude of individuals, animated by a spirit of true Christian charity, embarked in this pious cause on their own private authority, and offered their mediation and good offices to reconcile the two churches. It is true, indeed, that these peacemakers were, generally speaking, of the Reformed church; and that those among the Lutherans, who appeared in this amiable character, were but few, in comparison with the great number of Calvinists that favoured this benevolent but arduous defign. The most eminent of the Calvinistical peace-makers was John Dureus, a native of Scotland, and a man justly celebrated on account of his univerfal benevolence, folid piety, and extensive learning; but, at the same time, more remarkable for genius and memory, than for nicety of discernment and accuracy of judgment, as might be evinced by feveral proofs and testimonies, were this the proper place for discussions of that nature. Be that as it will, never, perhaps, was there fuch an example of zeal and perfeverance as that exhibited by Dureus, who, during the space of forty years [k], suffered vexations,

C E N T. and underwent labours, which required the firmeft resolution, and the most inexhaustible pa-PART II. tience; wrote, exhorted, admonished, intreated, and disputed; in a word, tried every method that human wifdom could fuggeft, to put an end to the diffensions and animosities that reigned among the Protestant churches. For it was not merely by the persuasive eloquence of his pen, or by forming plans in the filence of the closet, that this worthy divine performed the task which his benevolence and zeal engaged him to undertake; his activity and industry were equal to his zeal; he travelled through all the countries in Europe where the Protestant religion had obtained any footing; he formed connexions with the doctors of both parties; he addressed himself to kings, princes, magistrates, and ministers; and by reprefenting, in lively and striking colours, the utility and importance of the plan he had formed, hoped to engage them more or less in this good cause, or at least to derive some succour from their influence and protection. But here his views were confiderably disappointed; for though his undertaking was generally applauded; and though he met with a favourable and civil reception from the greatest part of those to whom he addressed. himfelf, yet he found very few who were feriously disposed to alleviate his labours, by lending him their affiftance, and feconding his attempts by their influence and counfels. Nay fome, fulpecting that the fervent and extraordinary zeal of Dureus arose from mysterious and finister motives, and apprehending that he had fecretly formed a design of drawing the Lutherans into a snare, attacked him in their writings with animofity and bitterness, and loaded him with the sharpest invectives and reproaches. So that this wellmeaning man, neglected at length by those of his own communion, opposed and rejected by the followers followers of LUTHER, involved in various per- CENT. plexities and diffress, exhausted by unfuccessful SVII. labour, and oppressed and dejected by injurious PART II. treatment, perceived, by a painful experience, that he had undertaken a task which was beyond the power of a private person, and spent the remainder of his days in repose and obscurity at Cassel [1].

It may not be improper to observe here, that Dureus, who, notwithstanding the uprightness of his intentions in general, was sometimes desicient in frankness and ingenuity, had annexed to his plan of reconciliation certain doctrines which, were they susceptible of proof, would serve as a foundation for the union not only of the Lutherans and Calvinists, but also of all the different sects that bear the Christian name. For, among other things, he maintained, that the Apostles'

[1] See Coleri Historia Joh. Dur Et, published in 4to at Wittenberg in 1716, to which, however, many important additions might be made from public records, and also from documents that have not as yet feen the light. Some records and documents, of the kind here referred to, have been published by HASEUS, in his Bibliotheca Bremenf. Theologico-Philologica, tom. i. p. 911. and tom. iv. p. 683. A still greater number are given by GESSELIUS, in the Addenda Irenica, that are fubjoined to his Historia Ecclefiastica, tom. ii. p. 614. The transactions of DUR EUS at Marpurg are mentioned by SCHENK, in his Vita Professorum Theologia Marpurg, p. 202 .- His attempts in Holsein may be learned from the letters of LACKMAN and Lossius, which are joined together in the fame volume. His exploits in Pruffia and Poland are recorded by JABLONSKY, in his Historia Confensus Sendomiriensis, p. 127. and his labours in Denmark, the Palatinate, and Savitzerland, are mentioned respectively by Elswich, in his Fasciculus Epistol. Theolog, p. 147.—Seelen's Delicie Epistol. p. 353. and in the Museum Helvet. tom. iii. iv. v.—See also Jaegers Historia Seculi xvii. Decenn. vii. p. 171 .- BOHMIUS, Englische Reformations Historie, and more especially an account of DUREUS, published under my direction at Helmstadt, in the year 1744, by BENZELIUS, and entitled, Differiatio de JOHAN. DUREO, maxime de Actis ejus Suecanis. This Differtation contains a variety of ancedotes drawn from records not yet made public.

Creed.

XVII. PART I.

CENT. Creed was a complete body of divinity; the Ten SECT. II. Commandments a perfect fystem of morals; and the Lord's Prayer a comprehensive series of petitions for all the bleffings contained in the divine promifes. Now if this notion, that thefe facred compositions contain all that is essential to faith, obedience, and devotion, had been univerfally entertained, or evidently demonstrated, it would not have been a chimerical project to aim at a reconciliation of all Christian churches upon this basis, and to render these compositions the foundation of their coalition and the bond of their union. But it would have been highly chimerical to expect, that the Christian sects would universally adopt this notion, or be pleafed to fee the doctrines of Christianity reduced to fuch general principles. It is further to be observed, with respect to Dureus, that he shewed a peculiar propensity towards the fentiments of the Mystics and Quakers, on account of their tendency to favour his con-ciliatory and pacific project. Like them he placed the effence of religion in the afcent of the foul to God, in calling forth the hidden word, in fanning the divine spark that resides in the recesses of the human mind, and, in confequence of this fystem, was intimately perfuaded, that differences merely in theological opinions did not at all concern the effer ce of true piety.

Matthiæ and calixtus.

VII. Those among the Lutherans that appeared the most zealous in this pacific cause, were JOHN MATTHIÆ [m], bishop of Strengnes in Squeden, and George Calixtus, professor of divinity at Helmstadt, whom Dureus had animated with a portion

[[]m] MATTHIE had been chaplain to Gustavus Apol-PHUS, and was afterwards appointed, by that prince, preceptor to his daughter Christina, fo famous in history, on account of the whimfical peculiarities of her character, her tafte for learning, and her defertion of the Swedish throne and the Proteflant religion.

portion of his charitable and indulgent spirit. CENT. The former was a man of capacity and merit, the SECT. II. latter was eminently distinguished among the doc-PART II. tors of this century, by his learning, genius, probity, and candour; but they both failed in the arduous undertaking in which they had engaged, and fuffered confiderably in their attempts to promote the cause of unity and concord. The Olivebranches [n] of MATTHIE, who entitled thus his pacific productions, were, by a royal edict, publicly condemned and suppressed in Sweden; and their author, in order to appeale the fury of his enemies, was obliged to refign his bishopric, and pass the rest of his days in retirement [o]. The zeal of Calixtus, in calming the tumultuous and violent fpirit of the contending parties, drew upon him the bitterest reproaches, and the warmeft animofity and refentment from those who were more bent on maintaining their peculiar opinions, than in promoting that charity which is the end of the commandment; and while he was labouring to remove all fects and divisions, he appeared to many of his brethren in the light of a new fectary, who was founding the most pernicious of all fects, even that of the Syncretists, who were supposed to promote peace and concord at the expence of truth. We shall, before we finish this chapter, endeavour to give a more particular and circumstantial account of the sentiments and trials of this great man, to whose charge many other things were laid, besides the crime of endeavouring to unite the disciples of the same master in the amiable bonds of charity, concord, and mutual forbearance; and whose opinions and designs excited warm contests in the Lutheran church.

[n] Rami Oliva Septentrionalis.

^[0] See Schefferi Succia Litterata, p. 123. and Joh. Molleri ad cam Hypomnemata, p. 317.—Arkenholtz, Memoires de la Reine Christine, tom. i. p. 320. 505. tom. ii. p. 63.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II.

The profperous events that happened to the Lutheran church,

VIII. The external state of the Lutheran church at this period was attended with various circumstances of prosperity, among which we may reckon its standing firm against the assaults of Rome, whose artifice and violence were in vain employed to bring on its destruction. It is well known, that a very confiderable number of Lutherans refided in those provinces where the public exercise of their religion was prohibited. It has more especially been shewn by the late memorable emigration of the Saltzburgers [p], that still greater numbers of them lay concealed in that land of despotism and bigotry, where the smallest dissent from popery, with whatever fecrecy and circumspection it may be disguised, is considered as an enormous and capital crime; and that they preferved their religious fentiments and doctrines pure and uncorrupted amidst the contagion of Romish superstition, which they always beheld with aversion and horror. In those countries which are inhabited by perfons of different communions, and whose sovereigns are members of the Romish church, we have numberless instances of the cruelty and injustice practifed by the papifts against those that dissent from them; and these cruelties are exercised under a pretext suggested by the most malevolent bigotry, which reprefents these dissenters as seditious subjects, and confequently as worthy of the most rigorous treatment. And yet it is certain, that, amidst all these vexations, the Lutheran church has stood its ground; nor has either the craft or fury of its enemies been able, any where, to deprive it en- C E N T. tirely of its rights and privileges. It may further SECT. II. be observed, that the doctrine of LUTHER was PART II. carried into Afia, Africa, and America, by feveral persons who fixed their habitations in those distant regions, and was also introduced into some parts of Europe, where it had hitherto been unknown.

CF [p] For an account of the perfected Lutherans in the archbi opric of Salta long, see Burner's Travels. See more especially a famous Latin discurse, published at Tubingen, in the year 1732, under the following title: Commentarious Theologicus de nos tolerandis in Religione Diffentientibus, quam Prefide CHRIST. MATTH. PEAFFIO defender WOLF. LUD. LETS-CHING.

IX. When we turn our view to the internal flate of the Lutheran church during this century, larger we shall find it improved in various respects; though feveral blemishes yet remained that clouded its lustre. It must be acknowledged, to the honour of the Lutherans, that they cultivated all the various branches of literature, both facred and profane, with uncommon industry and fuccess, and made feveral improvements in the sciences, which are too well known to ftand in need of a particular mention; and of which a circumstantial enumeration would be inconfiftent with the brevity we propose to observe in this history. But if it cannot be denied, on the one hand, that the cause of religion gained by these improvements in learning, it must be owned, on the other, that some branches of science were perverted by injudicious or ill-defigning men, to corrupt the pure simplicity of genuine Christianity, and to render its docurines abstruse and intricate. Thus it too often happens in life, that the best things are the most egregiously abused.

About the commencement of this century, the fciences chiefly cultivated in the fchools were logic and metaphyfics; though the manner of treating them was almost entirely destitute of elegance, fimplicity, and precision. But, in process of time, the scene changed in the seminaries of learning; and the more entertaining and agreeable branches of literature, that polish wit, excite taste, exercife judgment, and enrich memory, fuch as civil and natural history, philology, antiquities, criti-

CENT. cifm, and eloquence, gained the afcendant. Both SECT. II. these kinds of knowledge acquired also a more PART II. graceful, consistent, and regular form than that under which they had hitherto appeared. But it happened most unluckily, that while the boundaries of science were extended from day to day, and new discoveries and improvements were conflantly enriching the republic of letters, the credit of learning began fenfibly to decrease, and learned men feemed gradually to lofe those peculiar marks of veneration and distinction that the novelty of their character, as well as the excellence and importance of their labours, had hitherto drawn from the public. Among the various circumstances that contributed to this decline of literary glory, we may particularly reckon the multitude of those who, without natural capacity, tafte, or inclination, were led, by authority or a defire of applaufe, to literary pursuits; and by their ignorance or their pedantry, cast a reproach upon the republic of letters.

The finte of philosophy.

The Ariftotelians tri uniph.

X. The only kind of philosophy that was taught in the Lutheran schools, during the greatest part of this century, was that of ARISTOTLE, dreffed up in that scholastic form that increased its native intricacy and fubtilty. And fuch was the devout and excessive veneration entertained by many for this abstruse system, that any attempt to reject the Grecian oracle, or to correct its decisions, was looked upon as of the most dangerous consequence to the interests of the church, and as equally criminal with a like attempt upon the facred writings. Those who distinguished themselves in the most extraordinary manner by their zealous and invincible attachment to the Peripatetic philofophy, were the divines of Leipsic, Tubingen, Helmfladt, and Altorf. The enchantment, however, was not universal; and there were many who, withdrawing their private judgment from the voke yoke of authority, were bold enough to fee with cent. their own eyes; and of confequence difference XVII.

the blemishes that were indeed sufficiently visible PART II. in the pretended wildom of the Grecian fage. The first attempt to reduce his authority within narrow bounds was made by certain pious and prudent divines, who though they did not pretend to discourage all philosophical inquiries, yet were defirous of confining them to a few felect subjects; and complained, that the pompous denomination of philosophy was too frequently profituted [q], by being applied to unintelligible distinctions, and words, or rather founds, desti-tute of sense. These were succeeded in their dislike of the Peripatetic philosophy by the disciples of RAMUS, who had credit enough to banish it from feveral feminaries of learning, and to fubititute in its place the fystem of their master, which was of a more practical kind, and better adapted to the purposes of life [r]. But if the philosophy of Aristotle met with adversaries who opposed it upon folid and rational principles, it had also enemies of a very different character, who imprudently declaimed against philosophy in general, as highly detrimental to the cause of religion and the interests of fociety. Such was the fanatical extravagance of DANIEL HOFFMAN, profeffor at Helmstadt, who discovered, in this controverfy, an equal degree of ignorance and animofity; and fuch also were the followers of ROBERT FLUDD, JACOB BEHMEN, and the Rofecrucians, who boafted of having struck out, by the affistance of fire and divine illumination, a new, wonderful,

[r] See Jo. HERMAN AB ELSWICK, De varia Ariflotelis fortuna, § xxi. p. 54. and WALCHIUS, Historia Logices, lib. ii. eap. ii. fect. iii. § v. in Parergis ejus Academicis, p. 613.

^[7] Such, among others, was Wenseslas Schillingius, of whom a particular account is given by Arnold, in his Hifter. Ecclef. et Heret. p. ii. lib. xvii. cap. vi.

PART II.

CENT. derful, and celestial system of philosophy, of XVII.
SECT. II. which mention has been already made [s]. These adverfaries of the Stagirite were divided among themselves, and this diminished the strength and vigour of their opposition to the common enemy. But had they been ever fo closely united in their fentiments and meafures, they would not have been able to overturn the empire of ARISTOTLE, which was deeply rooted in the schools through long possession, and had a powerful support in the multitude of its votaries and defenders.

The freedom of philofophical inquiry gains ground.

XI. The Peripatetic fystem had still more formidable adversaries to encounter in Des CARTES and Gassendi, whose writings were composed with that perspicuity and precision that rendered them fingularly agreeable to many of the Lutheran doctors of this century, and made them look with contempt on that obfolete and barren philofophy of the schools, which was expressed in uncouth terms and barbarous phrases, without taste, elegance, or accuracy. The votaries of ARI-STOTLE beheld with envy these new philosophers, used their most zealous endeavours to bring them into discredit, and, for this purpose, represented their researches and principles as highly detrimental to the interests of religion and the growth of true piety. But when they found, by experience, that these methods of attack proved unfuccefsful, they changed their manner of proceeding, and (like a prudent general, who, befieged by a fuperior force, abandons his outworks and retires into the citadel) they relinquished much of their jargon, and defended only the main and effential principles of their system. To render these principles more palatable, they began to adorn them with the graces of elocution, and to mingle with their philosophical tenets the charms of polite literature. They even went fo far as to confess, CENT. that Aristotle, though the prince of philoso-Sect. II. phers, was chargeable with errors and defects, PART II. which it was both lawful and expedient to correct. But these concessions only served to render their adversaries more confident and enterprising, fince they were interpreted as refulting from a consciousness of their weakness, and were looked upon as a manifest acknowledgment of their defeat. In confequence of this, the enemies of the Stagirite renewed their attacks with redoubled impetuofity, and with a full affurance of victory; nor did they confine them to those branches of the Peripatetic philosophy which were allowed by its votaries to stand in need of correction, but levelled them, without distinction, at the whole system, and aimed at nothing lefs than its total diffolution. GROTIUS, indeed, who marched at the head of these philosophical reformers, proceeded with a certain degree of prudence and moderation. Puf-FENDORF, in treating of the law of nature and of the duties of morality, threw off, with more boldness and freedom, the Peripatetic yoke, and purfued a method entirely different from that which had been hitherto observed in the schools. This freedom drew upon him a multitude of enemies, who loaded him with the bitterest reproaches; his example was nevertheless followed by Thomasius, professor of law in the academy of Leipfic, and afterwards at Hall, who attacked the Peripatetics with new degrees of vehemence and zeal. This eminent man, though honourably diftinguished by the excellence of his genius and the strength of his resolution, was not, perhaps, the properest person that could be pitched upon to manage the interests of philosophy. His views, nevertheless, were vast; he aimed at the reformation of philosophy in general, and of the Peripatetic fystem in particular; and he assidu-

[[]s] See above, in the General History of the Church, & xxxi. terature.

SECT. II.

CENT. outly employed both the power of exhortation and the influence of example, in order to perfuade the PART II. Saxons to reject the Aristotelian system, which he had never read, and which most certainly he did not understand. The scheme of philosophy, that he fubstituted in its place, was received with little applaufe, and foon funk into oblivion; but his attempt to overturn the fystem of the Peripatetics, and to reftore the freedom of philosophical inquiry, was attended with remarkable fuccess, made, in a little time, the most rapid progress, and produced fuch admirable effects, that Tho-MASIUS is justly looked upon, to this day, as the chief of those bold spirits who pulled down philofophical tyranny from its throne in Germany, and gave a mortal blow to what was called the Sectarian Philosophy [t] in that country. The first seminary of learning that adopted the measures of THOMASIUS was that of Hall in Saxony, where he was professor; they were afterwards followed by the rest of the German schools, by some sooner, and by others later; and from thence a spirit of philosophical liberty began to spread itself into other countries, where the Lutheran religion was established. So that, towards the conclusion of this century, the Lutherans enjoyed a perfect liberty of conducting their philosophical refearches in the manner they judged the most conformable with truth and reason, of departing from the mere dictates of authority in matters of science, and of proposing publicly every one his respective opinions. This liberty was not the confequence of any positive decree of the state, nor was it inculcated by any law of the church; it feemed to refult from that invilible disposal of things, which cent. To we call accident, and certainly proceeded from Sect. II. the efforts of a few great men, seconding and expert it. citing that natural propenfity towards free inquiry, that can never be totally extinguished in the human mind. Many employed this liberty in extracting, after the manner of the ancient Eclectics, what they thought most conformable to reason, and most susceptible of demonstration, from the productions of the different schools, and connecting these extracts in such a manner as to constitute a complete body of philosophy. But some made a yet more noble use of this inestimable privilege, by employing, with indefatigable zeal and industry, their own faculties in the investigation of truth, and building upon folid and unchangeable principles a new and fublime fystem of philofophy. At the head of these we may place Leibnitz, whose genius and labours have defervedly rendered his name immortal [u].

^[1] By the Sectarian Philosophers were meant, those who followed implicitly some one of the ancient philosophical fects, without daring to use the dictates of their private judgment, to correct or modify the doctrines or expressions of these hoary guides. refult

In this conflict between the reformers of philofophy and the votaries of Aristotle, the latter loft ground from day to day, and his fystem, in consequence of the extremes that reformers often fall into, grew so disgusting and odious, that condemnation was passed on every part of it. Hence the science of Metaphysics, which the Grecian sage had considered as the master-science, as the original fountain of all true philosophy, was spoiled of its honours, and fell into contempt; nor was the authority and influence even of Des Cartes (who also set out, in his enquiries, upon metaphysical principles) sufficient to support it against the prejudices of the times. However, when the first heat of opposition began to cool, and the [[]u] The curious reader will find an accurate and ample account of this revolution in philosophy, in the learned Brucker's Historia Critica Philosophia.

CENT. VII. SECT. II.

The virtues and detects of the Lutheran doc-rage of party to fubfide, this degraded fcience was not only recalled from its exile, by the inter-PA TIL position and credit of LEIBNITZ, but was also reinstated in its former dignity and lustre.

XII. The defects and vices of the Lutheran clergy have been circumstantially exposed, and even exaggerated by many writers, who feem to require in the ministers of the Gospel a degree of perfection, which ought indeed always to be aimed at, but which no wife observer of human nature can ever hope to fee generally reduced to practice. These censurers represent the leading men of the Lutheran church as 'arrogant, contentious, despotic, and uncharitable; as destitute of Christian simplicity and candour; fond of quibbling and dispute; judging of all things by the narrow spirit of party; and treating with the utmost antipathy and aversion those that differ from them ever fo little in religious matters. The lefs confiderable among the Lutheran doctors were charged with ignorance, with a neglect of the facred duties of their station, and with a want of talent in their character as public teachers. And the whole body were accused of avarice, laziness, want of piety, and corruption of manners.

It will be acknowledged, without difficulty, by those who have studied with attention and impartiality the genius, manners, and history of this century, that the Lutheran clergy are not wholly irreproachable with respect to the matters that are here laid to their charge, and that many Lutheran churches were under the direction of pastors who were highly deficient, fome in zeal, others in abilities, many in both, and confequently ill qualified for propagating the truths of Christianity with wisdom and fuccess. But this repreach is not peculiarly applicable to the feventeenth century; it is a general charge that, with too much truth, may be brought against all the CENT. ages of the church. On the other hand, it must SECT. II. be acknowledged, by all fuch as are not blinded PART II. by ignorance or partiality, that the whole of the Lutheran clergy did not confift of these unworthy pastors, and that many of the Lutheran doctors of this century were distinguished by their learning, piety, gravity and wildom. Nay, perhaps it might be difficult to decide, whether in our times, in which some pretend that the fanctity of the primitive doctors is revived in feveral places, there be not as many that do little honour to the pastoral character as in the times of our ancestors? It must further be observed, that many of the defects which are invidioufly charged upon the doctors of this age, were in a great measure owing to the infelicity of the times. They were the unhappy effects of those public calamities which a dreadful war, of thirty years duration, produced in Germany; they derived strength from the influence of a corrupt education, and were fometimes encouraged by the protection and countenance of vitious and profligate magistrates.

too

XIII. That the vices of the Lutheran clergy were partly owing to the infelicity of the times, will appear evident from fome particular inflances. It must be acknowledged that, during the great which they est part of this century, neither the discourses of lived. the pulpit nor the instructions of the schools were adapted to promote among the people, just ideas of religion, or to give them a competent knowledge of the doctrines and precepts of the Gospel. The eloquence of the pulpit, as fome ludicroufly and too justly represent it, was reduced, in many places, to the noify art of bawling (during a certain space of time measured by a fand-glass) upon various points of theology, which the orators understood but very little, and which the people did not understand at all; and when the import-Vol. V. ant

XVil. SECT. II.

CENT. ant doctrines and precepts of Christianity were introduced in these public discourses, they were PART II. frequently disfigured by tawdry and puerile ornaments, wholly inconfiftent with the fpirit and genius of the divine wifdom that shines forth in the Gofpel, and were thus, in a great measure, deprived of their native beauty, efficacy, and power. All this must be confessed; but perhaps it may not appear furprifing, when all things are duly confidered. The ministers of the Gospel had their heads full of fonorous and empty words, of trivial distinctions and metaphysical subtilties, and very ill furnished with that kind of knowledge that is adapted to touch the heart and to reform the life; they had also few models of true eloquence before their eyes; and therefore it is not much to be wondered, if they dreffed out their discourses with foreign and tasteless ornaments.

> The charge brought against the universities, that they fpent more time in subtile and contentious controverfy, than in explaining the holy Scriptures, teaching the duties of morality, and promoting a spirit of piety and virtue, though too just, yet may also be alleviated by considering the nature and circumstances of the times. The Lutherans were furrounded with a multitude of adverfaries, who obliged them to be perpetually in a poslure of defence; and the Romancatholics, who threatened their destruction, contributed, in a more particular manner, to excite in their doctors that polemic spirit, which unfortunately became a habit, and had an unhappy influence on the exercise both of their academical and paftoral functions. In time of war, the military art not only becomes fingularly respectable, but is preferred, without hefitation, before all others, on account of its tendency to maintain the ineftimable bleffings of liberty and independence; and thus, in the midit of theological commotions.

motions, the fpirit of controversy, by becoming CENT. necessary, gains an ascendant, which, even when SECT. II. the danger is over, it is unwilling to lofe. It PART II. were indeed ardently to be wished, that the Lutherans had treated with more mildness and charity those who differed from them in religious opinions, and had discovered more indulgence and forbearance towards fuch, more especially, as by ignorance, fanaticism, or excessive curiosity, were led into error, without pretending, nevertheless, to disturb the public tranquillity by propagating their particular systems. But they had unhappily imbibed a spirit of persecution in their early education; this was too much the fpirit of the times, and it was even a leading maxim with our ancestors, that it was both lawful and expedient to use severity and force against those whom they looked upon as heretics. This maxim was derived from Rome; and even those who separated from that church did not find it eafy to throw off, all of a fudden, that despotic and uncharitable fpirit that had fo long been the main-spring of its government, and the general characteristic of its members. Nay, in their narrow views of things, their very piety feemed to suppress the generous movements of fraternal love and forbearance; and the more they felt themselves animated with a zeal for the divine glory, the more difficult did they find it to renounce that ancient and favourite maxim, which had to often been ill interpreted and ill applied, that whoever is found to be an ene-

[w] It were to be wished that the Lutherans had not, in many places, persevered in these severe and despotic principles longer than other Protestant churches. Until this very day, the Lutherans of Frankfort on the Maine have always restuded to permit the Resourced to celebrate public worship within the bounds, or even in the submits, of that city. Many attempts have been made to conquer their obstinacy in this respect, but hitherto without success.

my to God, ought alfo to be declared an enemy to his country [TU].

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II.

The ecclefiaftical laws and polity of the Luthe-

XIV. There were few or no changes introduced, during this century, into the form of government, the method of worship, and the external rites and ceremonies of the Lutheran church. Many alterations would indeed have been made in all these, had the princes and states of that communion judged it expedient to put in execution the plans that had been laid by Tho-MASIUS, and other eminent men, for reforming its ecclefiaftical polity. These plans were built upon a new principle, which supposed, that the majesty and supreme authority of the sovereign was the only fource of church-power. fundamental principle, which these great men took all imaginable pains to prove, by folid and ftriking arguments, they raifed a voluminous fystem of laws, which, in the judgment of many, evidently tended to this conclusion: that the same fovereign who prefides in the flate ought to rule in the church; that prince and pontif are inseparable characters; and that the ministers of the Gospel are not the ambassadors of the Deity, but the deputies or vicegerents of the civil magi-These reformers of Lutheranism did not ftop here; they reduced within narrower bounds the few privileges and advantages that the clergy yet retained; and treated many of the rites, institutions, and customs of our church, as the remains of popish superstition. Hence an abundant fource of contention was opened, and a long and tedious controverly was carried on with warmth and animofity between the clergy and civilians. We leave others to determine with what views thefe debates were commenced and fomented, and with what fuccess they were respectively carried on by the contending parties. We shall only observe, that their effects and confequences were unhappy, as, in many places, they proved.

proved, in the iffue, detrimental to the reputation CENT. of the clergy, to the dignity and authority of re- SECT. H. ligion, and to the peace and prosperity of the Lu- PART II. theran church $\lceil x \rceil$. The present state of that church verifies too plainly this observation. It is now its fate to fee few entering into its public fervice, who are adapted to restore the reputation it has loft, or to maintain that which it yet retains. Those who are distinguished by illustrious birth, uncommon genius, and a liberal and ingenuous turn of mind, look upon the study of theology, which has fo little external honours and advantages to recommend it, as below their ambition; and hence the number of wife, learned, and eminent ministers grows less considerable from day to day. This circumstance is deeply lamented by those among us who confider with attention the dangerous and declining state of the Lutheran church; and it is to be feared, that our descendants will have reason to lament it still more bitterly.

XV. The eminent writers that adorned the The most Lutheran church through the course of this century, were many in number. We shall only writers. mention those whom it is most necessary for a student of ecclesiastical history to be more particularly acquainted with; fuch are ÆGIDIUS and Nicholas Hunnius-Leonard Hutter-Joseph and John Ernesti Gerhard-George [x] It has been the ill hap even of well-defigning men to fall into pernicious extremes, in the controversies relating to the foundation, power, and privileges of the church. Too few have steered the middle way, and laid their plans with such . equity and wifdom as to maintain the fovereignty and authority of the flate, without reducing the church to a mere creature of civil policy. The reader will find a most interesting view of this nice and important fubject, in the learned and ingenious bishop of Gloucester's Alliance Letween Church and State, and in his Dedication of the fecond volume of his Divine Legation of Mofes, to my Lord MANSFIELD.

and

SECT. II.

CENT. and FREDERICK ULRIC CALIXTUS-the MENTzers—the Oleanius's—Frederic Baldwin— PART II. ALBERT GRAWER-MATTHIAS HOE-the CARPzovius's-Iohn and Paul Tarnovius-Iohn Affelman-Eilhart Luber-the Lysers-MICHAEL WALTHER - I ACHIM HILDEBRAND - JOHN VALENTINE ANDREAS-SOLOMON GLAS-SIUS-ABRAHAM CALOVIUS-THEODORE HACK-SPAN-JOHN HULSEMAN-JACOB WELLER-PE-TER and John Mausæus, brothers-John Con-RAD DANHAVER - JOHN GEORGE DORSCHÆUS-JOHN ARNOT-MARTIN GEVER-JOHN ADAM SCHARTZER-BALTHAZAR and JOHN MEISNER-Augustus Preiffer-Henry and John Mul-LER-TUSTUS CHRISTOPHER SCHOMER-SEBAS-TIAN SCHMIDT-CHRISTOPHER HORSHOLT-the OSIANDERS -- PHILIP TACOB SPENER -- GEB. THEODORE MEYER-FRIDEM. EECHMAN-and others [v].

An historical view of the reserous doctrine of the Lutherans.

XVI. The doctrine of the Lutheran church remained entire during this century; its fundamental principles received no alteration, nor could any doctor of that church, who should have prefumed to renounce or invalidate any of those theological points that are contained in the symbolical books of the Lutherans, have met with toleration and indulgence. It is, however, to be observed, that, in later times, various circumstances contributed to diminish, in many places, the authority of these symbolical oracles, which had fo long been confidered as an almost infallible rule of faith and practice. Hence arose that unbounded liberty which is at this day enjoyed by all who are not invested with the character of public

[[] y] For an account of the lives and writings of these authors, see Witte's Memoria Theologorum, and his Diarium Biographicum; as also Pirringius, Goesius, and other writers of literary history.

public teachers, of diffenting from the decifions of C ENT. these fymbols or creeds, and of declaring this diffent Sect. II. in the manner they judge the most expedient. The PART II. case was very different in former times: whoever ventured to oppose any of the received doctrines of the church, or to fpread new religious opinions among the people, was called before the higher powers to give an account of his conduct, and very rarely escaped without fuffering in his fortune or reputation, unless he renounced his innovations. But the teachers of novel doctrines had nothing to apprehend, when, towards the conclufion of this century, the Lutheran churches adopted that leading maxim of the Arminians, that Christians were accountable to God alone for their religious sentiments; and that no individual could be justly punished by the magistrate for his erroneous opinions, while he conducted himself like a virtuous and obedient subject, and made no attempts to disturb the peace and order of civil fociety. It were to be wished, that this religious liberty, which the dictates of equity must approve, but of which the virtuous mind alone can make a wife and proper use, had never degenerated into that unbridled licentiousnefs that holds nothing facred, but with an audacious infolence tramples under foot the folemn truths of religion, and is constantly endeavouring to throw contempt upon the respectable profession of its ministers.

XVII. The various branches of facred erudi, Sacred philology cultion were cultivated with uninterrupted zeal and tivated affiduity among the Lutherans, who, at no period Lutherans. of time, were without able commentators, and learned and faithful guides for the interpretation of the Holy Scriptures. It is natural to mention here Tarnovius, Gerhard, Hacspan, Calix-TUS, ERASMUS, SCHMIDT, to whom might be added a numerous list of learned and judicious ex-

C FNT. positors of the facred oracles. But what appears XVII. SECT. II. more peculiarly worthy of observation is, that PART II. the very period which fome look upon as the most barren of learned productions, and the most remarkable for a general inattention to the branch of erudition now under confideration, produced that inestimable and immortal work of Solomon GLASSIUS, which he published under the title of Sacred Philology, and than which none can be more useful for the interpretation of Scripture, as it throws an uncommon degree of light upon the language and phraseology of the inspired writers. It must, at the same time, be candidly acknowledged, that a confiderable part of this century was more employed, by the profeffors of the different univerfities, in defending, with fubtilty and art, the peculiar doctrines of the Lutheran church, than in illustrating and explaining the Holy Scripture, which is the only genuine fource of divine truth. Whatever was worthy of cenfure in this manner of proceeding, was abundantly repaired by the more modern divines of the Lutheran communion; for no fooner did the rage of controverfy begin to fubfide, than the greatest part of them turned their principal studies towards the exposition and illustration of the Sacred Writings; and they were particularly animated in the execution of this laborious task, by observing the indefatigable industry of those among the Dutch divines, who, in their interpretations of Scripture, followed the fentiments and method of Cocceius. At the head of these modern commentators we may place, with justice, SEBASTIAN SCHMIDT, who was at least the most laborious and voluminous expositor of this age. After this learned writer, may be ranked Calo-VIUS, GEIER, SCHOMER, and others of inferior note.

note [z]. The contests excited by the persons cent. called Pictifts, though unhappy in feveral respects, SECT. II. were nevertheless attended with this good effect, PART II. that they engaged many to apply themselves to the study of the Holy Scriptures, which they had too much neglected before that period, and to the perusal of the commentators and interpreters of the facred oracles. These commentators purfued various methods, and were unequal both in their merit and fuccess. Some confined themfelves to the fignification of the words of Scripture, and the literal fense that belonged to the phrases of the inspired writers; others applied their expositions of Scripture to the decision of controverted points, and attacked their adversaries either by refuting their false interpretations of Scripture, or by making use of their own commentaries to overturn their doctrines; a third fort, after unfolding the fense of Scripture, applied it carefully to the purposes of life and the direction of practice. We might mention another class of interpreters, who, by an assiduous perufal of the writings of the Cocceians, are faid to have injudiciously acquired their defects, as appears by their turning the facred history into allegory, and feeking rather the more remote and mysterious sense of Scripture, than its obvious and literal fignification.

XVIII. The principal doctors of this century The Didactic theological and the desired followed, at first, the loose method of deducing their theological doctrine from Scripture under a teleptor by few general heads. This method had been ob- the Lutheferved in ancient times by Melancthon, and was vulgarly called Common-Place dividity. They, however, made use of the principles, terms, and fubtile distinctions of the Peripatetic philosophy,

^[2] See J. FRANC. BUDÆI Isagoge in Theologiam, lib. ii. cap. viii. p. 1686.

CENT. which was yet in high reputation, in explaining SFCT. II. and illustrating each particular doctrine. The PART II. first person that reduced theology into a regular fystem, and gave it a truly scientific and philosophical form, was GEORGE CALIXTUS, a man of great genius and erudition, who had imbibed the fpirit of the Aristotelian school. His design, in general, was not fo much cenfured, as the particular method he followed, and the form he gave to his theological fustem; for he divided the whole fcience of divinity into three parts, viz. the end, the fubject, the means; and this division, which was borrowed from Aristotle, appeared extremely improper to many. This philosophical method of ranging the truths of Christianity was followed, with remarkable zeal and emulation, by the most eminent doctors in the different schools of learning, and even in our times it has its votaries. Some indeed had the courage to depart from it, and to exhibit the doctrines of religion under a different, though still under a scientific, form; but they had few followers, and struggled in vain against the empire of ARISTOTLE, who reigned with a despotic authority in the schools.

There were, however, many pious and good men, who beheld, with great displeasure, this irruption of metaphyfics into the fphere of theology, and never could be brought to relish this philosophical method of teaching the doctrines of Christianity. They earnestly defired to see divine truth freed from captious questions and subtilties, delivered from the shackles of an imperious system, and exhibited with that beautiful fimplicity, perfpicuity, and evidence, in which it appears in the facred writings. Perfons of this turn had their wishes and expectations in some measure answered, when, towards the conclusion of this century, the learned Spener and others, animated by his exhortations and example, began to inculcate the truths and precepts of religion in a more plain CENT. and popular manner, and when the eclectics had Sect. II. fucceeded to far as to dethrone Aristotle, and to PART H. bunish his philosophy from the greatest part of the Lutheran schools. Spenia was not so far fuccessful a, to render universal his popular method of teaching theology; it was nevertheless adopted by a confiderable number of doctors; and it cannot be denied, that, fince this period, the science of divinity, delivered from the jargon of the schools, has assumed a more liberal and graceful aspect. The same observation may be applied to controverfial productions; it is certain that polemics were totally deftitute of elegance and perspicuity so long as Aristotle reigned in the feminaries of learning, and that they were more or less embellished and improved since the fuppression and difgrace of the Peripatetic philofophy. It is, however, to be lamented, that controverly did not lofe, at this period, all the circumstances that had so justly rendered it displeafing; and that the defects, that had given fuch offence in the theological disputants of all parties, were far from being entirely removed. These defects still subfist, though perhaps in a less shocking degree; and whether we peruse the polemic writers of ancient or modern times, we shall find too few among them who may be faid to be animated by the pure love of truth, without any mixture of pride, passion, or partiality, and whom we may pronounce free from the illusions of prejudice and felf-love.

truths

XIX. The science of morals, which must ever moral sci-be esteemed the master-science, from its immediate influence upon life and manners, was, for a long the Lutherans, time, neglected among the Lutherans. If we except a few eminent men, fuch as ARNDT and GERHARD, who composed some popular treatises concerning the internal worship of the Deity, and

CENT. the duties of Christians, there did not appear, XVII.
SECT. II. during the greatest part of this century, any moPART II. ral writer of distinguished merit. Hence it happened, that those who applied themselves to the business of resolving what are called Cases of Confcience, were held in high esteem, and their tribunals were much frequented. But as the true principles and foundations of morality were not, as yet, established with a sufficient degree of precifion and evidence, their decifions were often erroneous, and they were liable to fall into daily mistakes. Calixtus was the first who separated the objects of faith from the duties of morality. and exhibited the latter under the form of an independent science. He did not, indeed, live to finish this work, the beginning of which met with universal applause; his disciples however employed, with fome degree of fuccess, the instructions they had received from their master, in executing his plan, and composing a system of Moral This fystem, in process of time, fell into diferedit, on account of the Peripatetic form under which it appeared; for, notwithstanding the striking repugnance that there is, in the very nature of things, between the beautiful science of Morals and the perplexing intricacies of Metaphyfics, CALIXTUS could not abstain from the latter in building his Moral fystem. The moderns, however, stripped morality of the Peripatetic garment, calling to their affiftance the law of nature, which had been explained and illustrated by Pur-FENDORF and other authors, and comparing this law with the facred writings, they not only difcovered the true fprings of Christian virtue, and entered into the true spirit and sense of the divine laws, but also digested the whole science of Morals into a better order, and demonstrated its principles with a new and fuperior degree of evidence. XX. Thefe

XX. These improvements in theology and CENT. morality did not diffuse such a spirit of concord SECT. II. in the Lutheran church, as was fufficient to heal PARTH. ancient divisions, or to prevent new ones. That Commochurch, on the contrary, was involved in the most tions and lamentable commotions and tumults, during the the Luchewhole course of this century, partly by the controversies that arose among its most eminent doctors, and partly by the intemperate zeal of violent reformers, the fanatical predictions of pretended prophets, and the rash measures of innovators, who studiously spread among the people, new, fingular, and, for the most part, extravagant opinions. The controversies that divided the Lutheran doctors may be ranged under two classes, according to their different importance and extent, as some of them involved the whole church in tumult and discord, while others were less univerfal in their pernicious effects. Of the former class there were two controversies, that gave abundant exercise to the Polemic talents of the Lutheran doctors during the greatest part of this century; and thefe turned upon the religious fystems that are generally known under the denominations of Syncretism and Pictism. Nothing could be more amiable than the principles that gave rife to the former, and nothing more refoectable and praise-worthy than the design that was proposed by the latter. The Syncretists [a], animated with that fraternal love and that pacific fpirit, which Jesus Christ had fo often recommended as the peculiar characteristics of his true disciples, used their warmest endeavours to promote union and concord among Christians; and the Pietists had undoubtedly in view the restora-

[[]a] The Syncretifts were also called Calietines from their chief, GEORGE CALIETUS; and Helmfladiens, from the university where their plan of dostrine and union took he rife.

CENT. tion and advancement of that holiness and virtue, that had fuffered fo much by the influence PART II. of licentious manners on the one hand, and by the turbulent ipirit of controversy on the other. These two great and amiable virtues, that gave rife to the projects and efforts of the two orders of persons now mentioned, were combated by a third, even a zeal for maintaining the truth, and preferving it from all mixture of error. Thus the love of truth was unhappily found to fland in opposition to the love of union, piety, and concord; and thus, in this present critical and corrupt state of human nature, the unruly and turbulent passions of men can, by an egregious abuse, draw the worst consequences from the best things, and render the most excellent principles and views productive of confusion, calamity, and difcord.

The rife of the Synoretiltical or controverfics.

XXI. The origin of Syncretism was owing to GEORGE CALIETUS of Slefwick, a man of cininent and diftinguished abilities and merit, and who had few equals in this century, either in point of learning or genius. This great man being placed in a univerfity $\lceil b \rceil$, which, from the very time of its foundation, had been remarkable for encouraging freedom of enquiry, improved this happy. privilege, examined the respective doctrines of the various fects that bear the Christian name, and found, in the notions commonly received among divines, some things defective and erroncous. He accordingly gave early intimations of his diffatis. faction with the state of theology, and lamented, in a more particular manner, the divisions and factions that reigned among the fervants and disciples of the same great master. He therefore turned his views to the falutary work of foftening the animofities produced by these divisions, and c ENT. shewed the warmest defire, not so much of esta- XVII. blishing a perfect harmony and concord between PART II.

[[]b] The university of Helmstadt, in the dutchy of Brunswick, founded in the year 1576.

the jarring fects, which no human power feemed capable of effecting, as of extinguishing the hatred, and appeafing the refentment, which the contending parties discovered too much in their conduct towards each other. His colleagues did not feem at all averse to this pacific project; and the furprife that this their filence or acquiescence must naturally excite, in fuch as are acquainted with the theological fpirit of the feventeenth century, will be diminished, when it is considered, that the profesiors of divinity at Helmstadt bind themselves, at their admission, by an oath, to use their best and most zealous endeavours to heal the divisions, and terminate the contests that prevail among Christians. Neither CALIXTUS, however, nor his friends, escaped the opposition that it was natural to expect in the execution of fuch an unpopular and comprehensive project. They were warmly attacked, in the year 1639, by STATIUS BUSCHE-Rus, a Hanoverian ecclefiaftic, a bigoted votary of RAMUS, a declared enemy to all philosophy, and a man of great temerity and imprudence. This man, exasperated at the preference CALIX-Tus and his companions had given to the Peripatetic philosophy over the principles of the Ramists, composed a very malignant book, entitled, Crypto-Papifmus novæ Theologicæ Helmstadiensis [c], in which CALIXTUS was charged with a long lift of errors. Though this production made fome fmall impression on the minds of certain persons, it is nevertheless probable, that Buscher would have almost universally passed for a partial, malicious, and rash accuser, had his invectives and complaints

[[]c] i. e. Popery diffuifed under the mask of the new theological system of Helmstadt.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II. rendered Calixtus more cautious and prudent. But the upright and generous heart of this eminent man, which difdained diffimulation to a degree that bordered upon the extreme of imprudence, excited him to fpeak with the utmost frankness his private sentiments, and thus to give a certain measure of plausibility to the accusations of his adversary. Both he and his colleague Con-RAD HORNEIUS maintained, with boldness and perseverance, several propositions, which appeared, to many others besides Buscher, new, singular, and of a dangerous tendency; and CALIXTUS more especially, by the freedom and plainness with which he declared and defended his fentiments, drew upon him the refentment and indignation of the Saxon doctors, who, in the year 1645, were present at the conference of Thorn. He had been chosen by Frederic William, elector of Brandenburg, as colleague and affiftant to the divines he fent from Koning flerg to thefe conferences; the Saxon deputies were greatly incenfed to fee a Lutheran ecclefiaftic in the character of an affiftant to a deputation of Reformed doctors. This first cause of offence was followed by other incidents, in the course of these conferences, which increased the resentment of the Saxons against CALIXTUS, and made them accuse him of leaning to the fide of the Reformed churches. We cannot enter here into a circumstantial account of this matter, which would lead us from our main defign. We shall only observe, that when these conferences broke up, the Saxon doctors, and more especially HALSEMAN, WEL-LER, SCHARFIUS, and CALOVIUS, turned the whole force of their polemic weapons against CALIXTUS; and, in their public writings, reproached him with apostacy from the principles of Lutheranism, and with a propenfity towards the fentiments both of the Reformed and Romish churches. This great man did not receive tamely the infults of his ad- C EN T. versaries. His consummate knowledge of the SECT. II. philosophy that reigned in the schools, and his PART II. perfect acquaintance with the history of the church, rendered him an able disputant; and accordingly he repelled, with the greatest vigour, the attacks of his enemies, and carried on, with uncommon spirit and erudition, this important controverfy, until the year 1656, when death put an end to his labours, and transported him from these scenes of diffension and tumult into the regions of peace and concord [d].

XXII. Neither the death of CALIXTUS, nor the The contidecease of his principal adversaries, were suffici-iffue of these ent to extinguish the flame they had kindled; on debates. the contrary, the contest was carried on, after that period, with more animofity and violence

[d] Those who desire to be more minutely acquainted with the particular circumstances of this famous controversy, the titles and characters of the books published on that occasion, and the doctrines that produced fuch warm contests and fuch deplorable divisions, will do well to consult WALCHIUS, CA-ROLUS, WEISMAN, ARNOLD, and other writers; but above all, the third volume of the Cimbria Literata of MOLLERUS. p. 121. in which there is an ample account of the life, transactions, and writings of CALIXTUS. But, if any reader should push his curiosity still further, and be solicitous to know the more fecret springs that acted in this whole affair, the remote causes of the events and transactions relating to it, the spirit, views, and characters of the disputants, the arguments used on both sides; in a word, those things that are principally interesting and worthy of attention in controversies of this kind, he will find no history that will fatisfy him fully in these respects. A history that would throw a proper light upon these important matters, must be composed by a man of great candour and abilities; by one who knows the world, has ftudied human nature, is furnished with materials and documents that lie as yet concealed in the cabinets of the curious, and is not unacquainted with the spirit that reigns and the cabals that are carried on in the courts of princes. But were fuch an hiftorian to be found, I question very much, whether, even in our times, he could publish without danger all the circumflances of this memorable contest.

XVII.
SECT. II.
PART II.

than ever. The Saxon doctors, and more especially Calovius, infulted the ashes, and attacked the memory of this great man with unexampled bitterness and malignity; and, in the judgment of many eminent and worthy doctors, who were by no means the partifans of CALIXTUS, conducted themselves with such imprudence and temerity, as were every way adapted to produce an open fchism in the Lutheran church. They drew up a new kind of Creed, or confession of the Lutheran faith [e], which they proposed to place in the class of what the members of our communion call their Symbolical books, and which, of confequence, all professors of divinity and all candidates for the ministry would be obliged to sub-fcribe, as containing the true and genuine doctrine of the Lutheran church. By this new production of intemperate zeal, the friends and followers of Calixtus were declared unworthy of the communion of that church; and were, accordingly, supposed to have forfeited all right to the privileges and tranquillity that were granted to the Lutherans by the laws of the empire. The reputation of CALIXTUS found, nevertheless, some able defenders, who pleaded his cause with mo-desty and candour; such were TITIUS, HILDE-BRAND, and other ecclefiaftics, who were diftinguished from the multitude by their charity, moderation, and prudence. These good men shewed, with the utmost evidence, that the new Creed, mentioned above, would be a perpetual fource of contention and discord, and would thus have a fatal effect upon the true interests of the Lutheran church; but their counsels were overruled, and their admonitions neglected. . Among the writers who opposed this Creed, was FREDE- CENT. RIC ULRIC CALIXTUS, who was not destitute of Secr. II. abilities, though much inferior to his father in PART II. learning, genius, and moderation. Of those that stood forth in its vindication and defence, the most considerable were CALOVIUS and STRAU-CHIUS. The polemic productions of these contending parties were multiplied from day to day, and yet remain as deplorable monuments of the intemperate zeal of the champions on both fides of the question. The invectives, reproaches, and calumnies, with which these productions were filled, shewed too plainly that many of these writers, instead of being animated with the love of truth, and a zeal for religion, were rather actuated by a keen spirit of party, and by the suggestions of vindictive pride and vanity. These contests were of long duration; they were, however, at length fuspended, towards the close of this century, by the death of those who had been the principal actors in this scene of theological discord, by the abolition of the creed that had produced it, by the rife of the new debates of a different nature, and by other circumstances of inferior moment, which is needless to mention.

[[]e] The title of this new Creed was Confensus repetiti Fidei were Lutherana.

XXIII. It will be proper to give here some The opin account of the accusations that were brought calixius, against CALIXTUS by his adversaries. The principal charge was, his having formed a project, not of uniting into one ecclefiaftical body, as fome have understood it, the Romish, Lutheran, and Reformed churches, but of extinguishing the hatred and animofity that reigned among the members of these different communions, and joining them in the bonds of charity, mutual benevolence, and forbearance. This is the project, which was at first condemned, and is still known under-

CENT. under the denomination of Syncretism [f]. Se-XVII.
SECT. II. veral fingular opinions were also laid to the charge
PART II.

of

[f] It is neither my defign nor my inclination to adopt the cause of CALIXTUS; nor do I pretend to maintain, that his writings and his doctrines are exempt from error. But the love of truth obliges me to observe, that it has been the ill hap of this eminent man to fall into the hands of bad interpreters; and that even those who imagine they have been more fuccessful than others in investigating his true sentiments, have most grievously misunderstood them. CALIXTUS is commonly supposed to have formed the plan of a formal reconciliation of the Protestants with the church of Rome and its pontifs; but this notion is entirely groundless, fince he publicly and expressly declared, that the Protestants could by no means enter into the bonds of concord and communion with the Romish church, as it was conflituted at this time; and that, if there had ever existed any prospect of healing the divisions that reigned between it and the Protestant churches, this prospect had entirely vanished since the council of Trent, whose violent proceedings and tyrannical decrees had rendered the union. now under confideration, absolutely impossible. He is further charged with having either approved or excused the greatest part of those errors and superititions, that are looked upon as a dishonour to the church of Rome; but this charge is abundantly refuted, not only by the various treatifes, in which he exposed the falsehood and absurdity of the doctrines and opinions of that church, but also by the declarations of the Roman catholics themselves, who acknowledge that CALIXTUS attacked them with much more learning and ingenuity than had been discovered by any other Protestant writer *. It is true, he maintained that the Lutherans and Roman-catholics did not differ about the fundamental doctrines of the Christian faith; and it were to be wished, that he had never afferted any such thing, or, at least, that he had expressed his meaning in more proper and inoffensive terms. It must however be considered, that he always looked upon the popes and their votaries, as having adulterated these fundamental doctrines with an impure mixture or addition of many opinions and tenets, which no wife and good Christian could adopt; and this confideration diminishes a good deal the extravagance of an affertion, which, otherwise, would deserve the severest censure. We shall not enter further into a review of the imputations that were cast of this great man, and were exaggerated and CENT. blackened, as the most innocent things generally SECT. II. are, when they pass through the medium of malig- PART II. nity and party-spirit. Such were his notions concerning the obscure manner in which the doctrine of the Trinity was revealed under the Old Testament dispensation; the appearances of the Son of God during that period; the necessity of good works to the attainment of everlasting salvation; and God's being occasionally [g] the author of fin. These notions, in the esteem of many of the best judges of theological matters, have been always looked upon as of an indifferent nature, as opinions which, even were they false, do not affect the great and fundamental doctrines of Christianity. But the two great principles that CA-LIXTUS laid down as the foundation and groundwork of all his reconciling and pacific plans, gave much more offence than the plans themselves, and drew upon him the indignation and resentment of upon CALIXTUS, by persons more disposed to listen to his accufers, than to those who endeavour, with candour and impartiality, to represent his fentiments and his measures in their true point of view. But if it should be asked here, what this man's real defign was? we answer, that he laid down the following maxims: First, That if it were possible to bring back the church of Rome to the flate in which it was during the first five centuries, the Protestants would be no longer justified in rejecting its communion: Secondly, That the modern members of the Romish church, though polluted with many intolerable errors, were not all equally criminal; and that fuch of them, more especially, as fincerely believed the dostrines they had learned from their parents or masters, and by ignorance, education, or the power of babit, were hindered from perceiving the truth, were not to be excluded from falvation, nor deemed heretics; provided they gave their affent to the doctrines contained in the Apostles' Creed, and endeavoured seriously to govern their lives by the precepts of the Gofpel. I do not pretend to defend these maxims, which seem, however, to have many patrons in our times; I would only observe, that the doctrine they contain is much less intolerable than that which was commonly imputed to CALIXTUS.

^{*} Bossuet, in his Traité de la Communion fous les deux Especes, p. i. § ii. p. 12. Speaks thus of the eminent man now under consideration: Le fameux George Calixte, le plus éabile des Lutheriens de nêtre tems, qui a cerit le plus destiment contre pous, &c.

[g] Per accidens.

CENT. many. Those principles were; First, That the SECT. 11. fundamental doctrines of Christianity (by which he PART II. meant those elementary principles from whence all its truths flow) were preserved pure and entire in all the three communions, and were contained in that ancient form of dollrine, that is vulgarly known by the name of the Apostles' Creed. And, secondly, That the tenets and opinions, which had been constantly received by the ancient doctors during the first five centuries, were to be considered as of equal truth and authority with the express declarations and doctrines of scripture. The general plan of CALIXTUS was founded upon the first of these propositions; and he made use of the second to give some degree of plausibility to certain Romish doctrines and institutions, which have been always rejected by the protestant church; and to establish a happy concord between the various Christian communions that had hitherto lived in the state of dissension and feparation from each other.

Dehates carried on with the d . ctors of Pintelen and Koning Berg, XXIV. The divines of Rintelen, Koning Sherg, and Jena, were more or less involved in these warm contests. Those of Rintelen, more especially Henichius and Musæus, had, on feveral occasions, and particularly at the conference of Cassel, shewn plainly that they approved of the plan of CALIXTUS for removing the unhappy difcords and animofities that reigned among Christians, and that they beheld with peculiar fatiffaction that part of it that had for its object union and concord among the Protestant churches. Hence they were opposed with great animosity by the Saxon doctors and their adherents, in various polemic productions [b].

The pacific spirit of CALIXTUS discovered itself also at Koning flerg. John Laterman, Michael

BEHMIUS,

[[]b] See ABRAH. CALOVII Historia Syncrestica, p. 618 .-Jo. GEORGII WALCHII Introductio in controversias Lutheran. vol. i. p. 286,

BEHMIUS, and the learned CHRISTOPHER DRYER, CENT. who had been the disciples of that great man, SECT. II. were at little pains to conceal their attachment to PART II. the fentiments of their master. By this discovery, they drew upon them the resentment of their colleagues John Behmius and Celestine Mislenta, who were feconded by the whole body of the clergy of Koning sberg; and thus a warm controversy arose, which was carried on, during many years, in fuch a manner as did very little honour to either of the contending parties. The interpolition of the civil magistrate, together with the decease of BEHMIUS and MISLENTA, put an end to this intestine war, which was succeeded by a new contest of long duration between DRYER and his affociates on the one fide, and feveral foreign divines on the other, who confidered the fystem of Calixtus as highly pernicious, and looked upon its defenders as the enemies of the church. This new controverfy was managed, on both fides, with as little equity and moderation as those which preceded it [i].

XXV. It must, at the same time, be acknow- and those of ledged, to the immortal honour of the divines of Jena. Jena, that they discovered the most consummate prudence and the most amiable moderation in the midst of these theological debates. For though they confessed ingenuously, that the sentiments of CALIXTUS were not of fuch a nature, as that they could be all adopted without exception, yet they maintained, that the greatest part of his tenets were much less pernicious than the Saxon doctors had represented them; and that several of them

[[]i] See CHRISTOPHER HARTKONCH'S Church-Hiftory of Prussia (written in German), book ii. chap. x. p. 602.—Mo-LERI, Cimbria Literata, tom. iii. p. 150 .- See also the A&s and Documents contained in the famous collection, entitled, Unsculidge Nachrichten, A. 1740, p. 144. A. 1742, p. 29. A. 1745, p. 91.

SECT. II.

CENT. were innocent, and might be freely admitted without any danger to the cause of truth. Solo-PART II. MON GLASSIUS, an ecclefiaftic, renowned for the mildness of his temper, and the equity of his proceedings, examined with the utmost candour and impartiality the opposite sentiments of the doctors, that were engaged in this important controversy, and published the result of this examination, by the express order of ERNEST, prince of Saxe-Gotha, furnamed the Pious [k]. Musæus, a man of fuperior learning and exquisite penetration and judgment, adopted fo far the fentiments of CA-LIXTUS, as to maintain, that good works might, in a certain fense, be considered as necessary to salvation; and that of the erroneous doctrines imputed to this eminent man, feveral were of little or no importance. It is very probable, that the followers of CALIXTUS would have willingly fubmitted this whole controversy to the arbitration of fuch candid and impartial judges. But this laudable moderation offended fo highly the Saxon doctors, that they began to suspect the academy of Jena of several erroneous opinions, and marked out Musæus, in a particular manner, as a perfon who had, in many respects, apostatized from the true and orthodox faith [1].

The rife of the controversy relate ing to lieifm.

XXVI. These debates were suppressed and succeeded by new commotions that arose in the church, and are commonly known under the de-

[k] This piece, which was written in German, did not appear in public till after the death of GLASSIUS, in the year 1662; a second edition of it was published in 8vo at Jena fome years ago. The piece exhibits a rare and shining instance of theological moderation; and is worthy of a ferious and attentive perufal.

[1] For an account of the imputations cast upon the divines of Jena, and more especially on Mus zus, see a judicious and folid work of the latter, entitled, Der Jenischen Theologen Ausfubrlicke Erklarung, &c .- See also Jo. GEORGII WALCHII Introductio in Controversias Ecclesia Lutherana, vol. i. p. 405.

nomination

nomination of the Pietistical Controversy. This CENT. controversy was owing to the zeal of a certain set SECT. II. of persons, who, no doubt, with pious and upright PART II. intentions, endeavoured to stem the torrent of vice and corruption, and to reform the licentious manners both of the clergy and the people. But, as the best things may be abused, so this reforming spirit inflamed persons that were but ill qualified to exert it with wifdom and fuccefs. Many, deluded by the fuggestions of an irregular imagination, and an ill-informed understanding, or guided by principles and views of a still more criminal nature, spread abroad new and singular opinions, false visions, unintelligible maxims, auftere precepts, and imprudent clamours against the discipline of the church; all which excited the most dreadful tumults, and kindled the flames of contention and discord. The commencement of Pietism was indeed laudable and decent. It was fet on foot by the pious and learned Spener, who, by the private focieties he formed at Francfort, with a defign to promote vital religion, rouzed the lukewarm from their indifference, and excited a fpirit of vigour and refolution in those who had been fatisfied to lament, in filence, the progrefs of impiety, The remarkable effect of these pious meetings was increased by a book published by this well-meaning man, under the title of Pious Desires, in which he exhibited a striking view of the disorders of the church, and proposed the remedies that were proper to heal them. Many persons of good and upright intentions were highly pleased both with the proceedings and writings of Spener, and indeed the greatest part of those. who had the cause of virtue and practical religion truly at heart, applauded the defigns of this good man, though an apprehension of abuses retained numbers from encouraging them openly. These abuses actually happened. The remedies proposed CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II. posed by Spener to heal the disorders of the church fell into unskilful hands, were administered without fagacity or prudence, and thus, in many cases, proved to be worse than the disease itself. The religious meetings abovementioned (or the Colleges of Piety, as they were usually called by a phrase borrowed from the Dutch), tended in many places to kindle in the breafts of the multitude the flames of a blind and intemperate zeal, whose effects were impetuous and violent, instead of that pure and rational love of God, whose fruits are benign and peaceful. Hence complaints arose against these institutions of Pieti/m, as if, under a striking appearance of fanctity, they led the people into false notions of religion, and fomented, in those who were of a turbulent and violent character, the feeds and principles of mutiny and fedition.

The commotions at Leighte.

XXVII. These first complaints would have been undoubtedly hushed, and the tumults they occasioned would have subsided by degrees, had not the contests that arose at Leipsic, in the year 1689, added fuel to the flame. Certain pious and learned professors of philosophy, and particularly Franckius, Schadius, and Paulus An-TONIUS, the disciples of Spener, who at that time was ecclefiastical superintendent of the court of Saxony, began to confider with attention the defects that prevailed in the ordinary method of instructing the candidates for the ministry; and this review perfuaded them of the necessity of using their best endeavours to supply what was wanting, and to correct what was amifs. For this purpose, they undertook to explain in their colleges certain books of holy Scripture, in order to render these genuine sources of religious knowledge better understood, and to promote a spirit of practical piety and vital religion in the minds of their hearers. The novelty of this method drew attention, and rendered it fingularly pleafing C E N T. to many; accordingly, these lectures were much SECT. II. frequented, and their effects were visible in the PART II. lives and converfations of feveral persons, whom they seemed to inspire with a deep sense of the importance of religion and virtue. Whether these first effusions of religious fervour, which were, in themselves, most certainly laudable, were always kept within the strict bounds of reason and discretion, is a question not easily decided. If we are to believe the report of common fame, and the testimonies of several persons of great weight, this was by no means the case; and many things were both faid and done in these Biblical Colleges (as they were called), which though they might be looked upon, by equitable and candid judges, as worthy of toleration and indulgence, were, nevertheless, contrary to custom, and far from being confiftent with prudence. Hence rumours were fpread, tumults excited, animofities kindled, and the matter at length brought to a public trial, in which the pious and learned men above mentioned were, indeed, declared free from the errors and herefies that had been laid to their charge, but were, at the fame time, prohibited from carrying on the plan of religious instruction they had undertaken with fuch zeal. It was during these troubles and divisions that the invidious denomination of Pietists was first invented; it may, at least, be affirmed, that it was not commonly known before this period. It was at first applied by fome giddy and inconfiderate perfons to those who frequented the Biblical Colleges, and lived in a manner fuitable to the instructions and exhortations that were addressed to them in these feminaries of piety. It was afterwards made use of to characterize all those who were either distinguished by the excessive austerity of their manners, or who, regardless of truth and opinion, were

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II. only intent upon practice, and turned the whole vigour of their efforts towards the attainment of religious feelings and habits. But as it is the fate of all those denominations by which peculiar feets are distinguished, to be variously and often very improperly applied, so the title of Pietists was frequently given, in common conversation, to persons of eminent wisdom and fanctity, who were equally remarkable for their adherence to truth and their love of piety; and, not seldom, to persons whose motley characters exhibited an enormous mixture of profligacy and enthusiasm, and who deserved the title of delirious fanatics better than any other denomination.

The progress of these dehates.

XXVIII. This contest was by no means confined to Leipfic, but diffused its contagion, with incredible celerity, through all the Lutheran churches in the different states and kingdoms of Europe. For, from this time, in all the cities, towns, and villages, where Lutheranism was professed, there started up, all of a sudden, persons of various ranks and professions, of both sexes, learned and illiterate, who declared, that they were called, by a divine impulse, to pull up iniquity by the root, to restore to its primitive lustre, and propagate through the world, the declining cause of piety and virtue, to govern the church of Christ by wifer rules than those by which it was at prefent directed, and who, partly in their writings, and partly in their private and public discourses, pointed out the means and measures that were necessary to bring about this important revolution. All those, who were struck with this imaginary impulse, unanimously agreed, that nothing could have a more powerful tendency to propagate among the multitude folid knowledge, pious feelings, and holy habits, than those private meetings that had been first con-trived by Spener, and that were afterwards introduced duced into Leipfic. Several religious affemblies C E N T. XVII. were accordingly formed in various places, which, S E C T. II. though they differed in some circumstances, and PART II. were not all conducted and composed with equal wisdom, piety, and prudence, were, however, defigned to promote the fame general purpose. In the mean time, these unusual, irregular, and tumultuous proceedings filled, with uneafy and alarming apprehensions, both those who were intrusted with the government of the church, and those who sat at the helm of the state. These apprehensions were justified by this important confideration, that the pious and well-meaning perfons, who composed these assemblies, had indiscreetly admitted into their community a parcel of extravagant and hot-headed fanatics, who foretold the approaching destruction of Babel (by which they meant the Lutheran church), terrified the populace with fictitious visions, assumed the authority of prophets honoured with a divine commission, obscured the sublime truths of religion by a gloomy kind of jargon of their own invention, and revived doctrines that had long before been condemned by the church. These enthufiasts also afferted, that the millennium, or thoufand years reign of the faints on earth, mentioned by St. John, was near at hand. They endeavoured to overturn the wifest establishments, and to destroy the best institutions, and desired that the power of preaching and administering public inftruction might be given promifcuously to all forts of persons. Thus was the Lutheran church torn afunder in the most deplorable manner, while the votaries of Rome stood by and beheld, with a fecret fatisfaction, these unhappy divisions. The most violent debates arose in all the Lutheran churches; and perfons, whose differences were occasioned rather by mere words, and questions of little consequence, than by any doctrines or institutions CENT. inflitutions of confiderable importance, attacked SYCII. one another with the bitterest animosity; and, in PART II. many countries, severe laws were at length enacted against the Pietists [m].

The debates carried on with Spener and the divines of Hall.

XXIX. These revivers of piety were of two kinds, who, by their different manner of proceeding, deferve to be placed in two diffinct classes. One sect of these practical reformers proposed to carry on their plan without introducing any change into the doctrine, discipline, or form of government that were established in the Lutheran church. The other maintained. on the contrary, that it was impossible to promote the progress of real piety among the Lutherans, without making confiderable alterations in their doctrine, and changing the whole form of their ecclefiaftical discipline and polity. The former had at their head the learned and pious Spener, who, in the year 1691, removed from Drefden to Berlin, and whose sentiments were adopted by the professors of the new academy at Hall; and particularly by Franckius and Paulus Antonius, CENT. who had been invited thither from Leipfic, where SECT. II. they began to be suspected of Pietism. Though PART II. few pretended to treat either with indignation or contempt the intentions and purpose of these good men (which, indeed, none could despise without affecting to appear the enemy of practical religion and virtue), yet many eminent divines, and more especially the professors and pastors of Wittemberg, were of opinion, that, in the execution of this laudable purpose, several maxims were adopted, and certain measures employed, that were prejudicial to the truth, and also detrimental to the interests of the church. Hence they looked on themselves as obliged to proceed publicly, first against Spener, in the year 1695, and afterwards against his disciples and adherents, as the inventors and promoters of erroneous and dangerous opinions. These debates are of a recent date; so that those who are desirous of knowing more particularly how far the principles of equity, moderation, and candour influenced the conduct and directed the proceedings of the contending parties, may easily receive a satisfactory information.

[m] This whole matter is amply illustrated by the learned Lo. GEORGE WALCHIUS, in his Introductio ad Controversias, vol, ii, and iii, who exhibits, fuccessively, the various scenes of this deplorable contest, with a view of the principal points that were controverted, and his judgment concerning each, and a particular account of the writers that displayed their talents on this occasion. It would, indeed, be difficult for any one man to give an ample and exact history of this contest, which was accompanied with fo many incidental circumflances, and was, upon the whole, of fuch a tedious and complicated nature. It were therefore to be wished, that a society of prudent and impartial persons, furnished with a competent knowledge of human nature and political transactions, and alfo with proper materials, would fet themselves to compose the history of Pieci/m. If several persons were employed in collecting from public records, and also from papers that lie yet concealed in the cabinets of the curious, the events which happened in each country where this controverly reigned; and if these materials, thus carefully gathered on the spot, were put in the hands of a man capable of digefting the whole; this would produce a most interciting and useful history.

XXX. These debates turned upon a variety of The subject points; and therefore the matter of them cannot bates. be comprehended under any one general head. If we confider them indeed in relation to their origin, and the circumstances that gave rise to them, we shall then be able to reduce them to fome fixed principles. It is well known, that those who had the advancement of piety most zealously at heart, were possessed of a notion, that no order of men contributed more to retard its progrefs than the clergy, whose peculiar vocation it was to inculcate and promote it. Looking upon this as the root of the evil, it was but natural that their plans of reformation should begin here; and, accordingly, they laid it down as an effential

SECT. II. PART II.

CENT. effential principle, that none should be admitted into the ministry, but such as had received a proper education, were diffinguished by their wisdom and fanctity of manners, and had hearts filled with divine love. Hence they proposed, in the first place, a thorough reformation of the schools of divinity; and they explained clearly enough what they meant by this reformation, which confifted in the following points: That the fystematical theology, which reigned in the academies, and was composed of intricate and disputable doctrines, and obscure and unusual forms of expresfion, should be totally abolished;—that polemi-cal divinity, which comprehended the controversies fubfifting between Christians of different communions, should be less eagerly studied, and less frequently treated, though not entirely neglected; -that all mixture of philosophy and human learning with divine wifdom was to be most carefully avoided;-that, on the contrary, all those who were defigned for the ministry, should be accustomed, from their early youth, to the perusal and fludy of the holy Scriptures;—that they should be taught a plain system of theology, drawn from these unerring sources of truth; -and that the whole course of their education was to be so directed, as to render them useful in life, by the practical power of their doctrine and the commanding influence of their example. As these maxims were propagated with the greatest in-dustry and zeal, and were explained inadvertently by fome, without those restrictions which prudence feemed to require; these professed patrons and revivers of piety were suspected of designs that could not but render them obnoxious to cenfure. They were supposed to despise philosophy and learning, to treat with indifference, and even to renounce, all inquiries into the nature and foundations of religious truth, to disapprove of the the zeal and labours of those who desended it-cent. The against such as either corrupted or opposed it, and to place the whole of their theology in certain vague and incoherent declamations concerning the duties of morality. Hence arose those same and the value of human learning, considered in connection with the interests of religion—the dignity and usefulness of systematic theology—the necessity of polemic divinity—the excellence of the mystic system—and also concerning the true method of instructing the people.

The second great object, that employed the zeal and attention of the perfons now under confideration, was, that the candidates for the ministry should not only, for the future, receive such an academical education as would tend rather to folid utility than to mere speculation; but also that they should dedicate themselves to God in a peculiar manner, and exhibit the most striking examples of piety and virtue. This maxim, which, when confidered in itself, must be acknowledged to be highly laudable, not only gave occasion to feveral new regulations, designed to restrain the passions of the studious youth, to inspire them with pious fentiments, and to excite in them holy resolutions; but also produced another maxim, which was a lasting source of controversy and debate, viz. " that no person, that was not himself a model of " piety and divine love, was qualified to be a "public teacher of piety, or a guide to others in the way of falvation." This opinion was confidered by many as derogatory from the power and efficacy of the word of God, which cannot be deprived of its divine influence by the vices of its ministers; and as a fort of revival of the longexploded errors of the Donatists: and what rendered it peculiarly liable to an interpretation of this nature was, the imprudence of some Pietists, VOL. V.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II. who inculcated and explained it, without those restrictions that were necessary to render it unexceptionable. Hence arose endless and intricate debates concerning the following questions: "whether the "religious knowledge acquired by a wicked man can be termed theology?"—"whether a vicious "person can, in effect, attain to a true knowledge of religion?"—"how far the office and ministry of an impious ecclesiastic can be pronounced falutary and efficacious?"—"whether a licentious and ungodly man cannot be susceptible of illumination?"—and other questions of a like nature.

XXXI. These revivers of declining piety went yet further. In order to render the ministry of their pastors as successful as possible, in rousing men from their indolence, and in stemming the torrent of corruption and immorality, they judged two things indispensably necessary. The first was, to suppress entirely, in the course of public instruction, and more especially in that delivered from the pulpit, certain maxims and phrases which the corruption of men leads them frequently to interpret in a manner favourable to the indulgence of their passions. Such, in the judgment of the Pietifts, were the following propositions: No man is able to attain to that perfection which the divine law requires-good works are not neceffary to falvation—in the act of justification, on the part of man, faith alone is concerned, without good works. Many, however, were apprehenfive, that, by the suppression of these propositions, truth itself must suffer deeply: and that the Christian religion, deprived thus of its peculiar doctrines, would be exposed, naked and defenceless, to the attacks of its adversaries. The second step they took, in order to give efficacy to their plans of reformation, was to form new rules of life and manners, much more rigorous and auftere than than those which had been formerly practised; CENT. and to place in the class of finful and unlawful Seco. II. gratifications several kinds of pleasure and amusement, which had hitherto been looked upon as innocent in themselves, and which could only become good or evil in consequence of the respective characters of those who used them with prudence, or abused them with intemperance. Thus, dancing, pantomimes, public sports, theatrical diversions, the reading of humorous and comical books, with feveral other kinds of pleafure and entertainment, were prohibited by the Pietists, as unlawful and unseemly; and, therefore, by no means of an indifferent nature. Many, however, thought this rule of moral discipline by far too rigid and fevere; and thus was revived the ancient contest of the schoolmen, concerning the famous question, whether any human actions are truly indifferent? i. e. equally removed from moral good on the one hand, and from moral evil on the other; and whether, on the contrary, it be not true, that all actions, whatever, must be either confidered as good, or as evil? The discussion of this question was attended with a variety of debates upon the feveral points of the prohibition now mentioned; and these debates were often carried on with animolity and bitterness, and very rarely with that precision, temper, and judgment that the nicety of the matters in dispute required. The third thing, on which the Pietists infisted, was, that besides the stated meetings for public worship, private assemblies should be held for prayer and other religious exercifes. But many were of opinion, that the cause of true piety and virtue was rather endangered than promoted by these assemblies; and experience and observation feemed to confirm this opinion. It would be both endless and unnecessary to enumerate all the little disputes that arose from the appointment of Y 2 thefe

SECT. II. PART II.

CENT. these private assemblies, and, in general, from the notions entertained, and the measures pursued by the Pietists [n]. It is nevertheless proper to obferve, that the lenity and indulgence shewn by these people to persons whose opinions were erroneous, and whose errors were, by no means, of an indifferent nature, irritated their adversaries to a very high degree, and made many fuspect, that the Pietists laid a much greater stress upon practice than upon belief, and, feparating what ought ever to be infeparably joined together, held virtuous manners in higher efteem than religious truth. Amidst the prodigious numbers that appeared in these controversies, it was not at all furprising, if the variety of their characters, capacities, and views, be duly confidered, that fome were chargeable with imprudence, others with intemperate zeal, and that many, to avoid what they looked upon as unlawful, fell injudiciously into the opposite extreme.

Thefe reflorers of vical religion endeavour to picmote piety at the expence of truth.

XXXII. The other class of Pietists already mentioned, whose reforming views extended fo far, as to change the fystem of doctrine and the form of ecclefialtical government that were eftablished in the Lutheran church, comprehended persons of various characters and different ways of thinking. Some of them were totally destitute of reason and judgment; their errors were the reveries of a disordered brain; and they were rather to be confidered as lunatics than as heretics.

^[12] These debates were first collected, and also needlessly multiplied, by Schelguigius, in his Synopfis Controversiarum fub pictatis prætextu motarum, which was published in the year 1701, in 8vo. The reader will also find the arguments, used by the contending parties in this dispute, judiciously summed up in two different works of LANGIUS, the one entitled, Antibarbarus; and the other the Middle-way; the former composed in Latin, the latter in German .- See also the TIMOTHEUS VERINUS OF VAL. ERN. LOSCHERUS.

Others were less extravagant, and tempered the CENT. fingular notions, they had derived from reading SECT. II. or meditation, with a certain mixture of the important truths and doctrines of religion. We shall mention but a few persons of this class, and those only who were distinguished from the rest by their fuperior merit and reputation.

Among these was Godfrey Arnold, a native of Saxony, a man of extensive reading, tolerable parts, and richly endowed with that natural and unaffested eloquence, which is fo wonderfully adapted to touch and to perfuade. This man diffurbed the tranquillity of the church towards the conclusion of this century, by a variety of theological productions, that were full of new and fingular opinions; and more especially by his ecclesiastical bistory, which he had the assurance to impose upon the public, as a work composed with candour and impartiality. His natural complexion was dark, melancholy, and auftere; and these seeds of fanaticism were so expanded and nourished by the perusal of the Mystic writers, that the flame of enthusiasim was kindled in his breast and broke forth in his conduct and writings with peculiar vehemence. He looked upon the Mystics as superior to all other writers, nay as the only depositaries of true wisdom; reduced the whole of religion to certain internal feelings and motions, of which it is difficult to form a just idea; neglected entirely the fludy of truth; and employed the whole power of his genius and eloquence in enumerating, deploring, and exaggerating, the vices and corruptions of human nature. If it is univerfally allowed to be the first and most effential obligation of an historian to avoid all appearance of partiality, and neither to be influenced by perfonal attachments nor by private refentment in the recital of facts, it must be fairly acknowledged, that no man could be lefs

 Y_3

CENT. XVII. SFCT. II. PART II. fit for writing history than ARNOLD. His whole history, as every one must see who looks into it with the smallest degree of attention, is the production of a violent spirit, and is dictated by a vehement antipathy against the doctrines and institutions of the Lutheran church. One of the fundamental principles that influences the judgment, and directs the opinions and decisions of this historian, throughout the whole course of his work, is, that all the abuses and corruptions that have found admittance into the church fince the time of the apostles, have been introduced by its ministers and rulers, men of vicious and abandoned characters. From this principle, he draws the following goodly confequence: that all those who opposed the measures of the clergy, or felt their refentment, were persons of distinguished fanctity and virtue; and that fuch, on the contrary, as either favoured the ministers of the church, or were favoured by them, were ftrangers to the fpirit of true and genuine piety. Hence proceeded ARNOLD's unaccountable partiality in favour of almost all that bore the denomination of Heretics [0]; whom he defended with the utmost zeal, without having always understood their doctrine, and, in some cases, without having even examined their arguments. This partiality was highly detrimental to his reputation, and rendered his history peculiarly obnoxious to censure. He did not, however, continue in this way of thinking; but as he advanced in years and experience, perceived the errors into which he had been led by the impetuofity of his passions and the contagious influence of pernicious examples,

^[0] ARNOLD'S History is thus entitled, Historia Ecclifastica et Heretica. Dr. Mosmeim's account of this learned man is drawn up with much feverity, and perhaps is not entirely destitute of partiality. See the Life of Arnold in the General Distinancy.

This fense of his mistakes corrected the vehemence CENT. of his natural temper and the turbulence of his Sect. II. party spirit, so that, as we learn from witnesses PART 1. worthy of credit, he became at last a lover of truth and a pattern of moderation $\lceil p \rceil$.

XXXIII. ARNOLD was far furpassed in fa- Dippelies. natical malignity and infolence by John Conrad DIPPELIUS, a Hessian divine, who assumed the denomination of the Christian Democritus, inflamed the minds of the simple by a variety of productions, and excited confiderable tumults and commotions towards the conclusion of this century. This vain, supercilious, and arrogant doctor, who feemed formed by nature for a fatyrift and a buffoon, instead of proposing any new system of religious doctrine and discipline, was folely employed in overturning those that were received in the Protestant church. His days were principally fpent in throwing out farcalms and invectives against all denominations of Christians; and the Lutherans, to whose communion he belonged. were more especially the objects of his raillery and derifion, which, on many occasions, spared not those things that had formerly been looked upon as the most respectable and sacred. It is much to be doubted, whether he had formed any clear and diffinct notions of the doctrines he taught; fince, in his views of things, the power of imagination domineered evidently over the dictates of right reason and common sense. But, if he really understood the religious maxims he was propagating, he had not certainly the talent of rendering them clear and perspicuous to others; for nothing can be more ambiguous and obscure than the expressions under which they are conveyed, and the arguments by which they are supported,

[[]p] See Coleri Vita Arnoldi.-Nouveau Diction. Hiftor. et Critique, tom. i. p. 485.

E E N T. A man must have the gift of divination, to be XVII. Sect. II. able to deduce a regular and consistent system of doctrine from the various productions of this incoherent and unintelligible writer, who was a chemist into the bargain, and whose brain seems to have been heated into a high degree of fermentation by the fire of the elaboratory. If the rude, motley, and farcastical writings of this wrong headed reformer should reach posterity, it will be certainly a just matter of surprise to our descendants, that a considerable number of their ancestors should have been so blind as to chuse for a model of genuine piety, and a teacher of religion, a man who had audaciously violated the first and most essential principles of folid piety and sound

The inventions and reveries of Petersen. fense [q].

XXXIV. The mild and gentle temper of John William Petersen, minister and first member of the ecclesiastical consistory of Lunenburg, distinguished him remarkably from the fiery enthusiast now mentioned. But the mildness of this goodnatured ecclesiastic was accompanied with a want of resolution, that might be called weakness, and a certain floridness and warmth of imagination, that rendered him peculiarly susceptible of illusion himself, and every way proper to lead others innocently into error. Of this he gave a very remarkable specimen in the year 1691, by maintaining publicly that ROSAMOND JULIANA, Coun- CENT. tess of Asseburg (whose disordered brain suggested to her the most romantic and chimerical notions) was honoured with a vision of the Deity, and commissioned to make a new declaration of his will to mankind. He also revived and propagated openly the obsolete doctrine of the Millennium, which Rosamond had confirmed by her pretended authority from above. This first error produced many; for error is fertile, especially in those minds where imagination has fourned the yoke of reason, and confiders all its airy vifions as folid and important discoveries. Accordingly, Petersen went about prophesying with his wife [r], who also gave herfelf out for a kind of oracle, and boafted of her extensive knowledge of the secrets of heaven. They talked of a general restitution of all things, at which grand and folemn period all intelligent beings were to be restored to happiness, the gates of hell opened, and wicked men, together with evil spirits, delivered from the guilt, power, and punishment of sin. They supposed that two distinst natures, and both of them buman, were united in Christ; one affumed in heaven before the ufformation of this globe, the other derived, upon earth, from the Virgin MARY. These opinions were fwallowed down by many among the multitude, and were embraced by fome of superior rank; they met, however, with great opposition, and were refuted by a confiderable number of writers, to whom Petersen, who was amply furnished with leifure and eloquence, made voluminous replies. In the year 1692, he was at length deposed; and, from that period, passed his days in the tranquillity of a rural retreat in the territory of Magdeburg, where he cheered his folitude by

[4] His works were all published, in the year 1747, in five volumes in 400; and his memory is fill highly honoured and respected by many, who consider him as laving been, in his day, an eminent teacher of true piety and wisdom. No kind of authors find such zealous readers and patrons as those who deal largely in invective, and swell themselves, by a vain self-sufficiency, into an imagined superiority over the rest of mankind. Besides, Directives was an excellent chemist and a good physician; and this procured him many friends and admirers, as all men are fond of riches and long life, and these two sciences were supposed to lead to the one and to the other.

[[]r] Her name was Johanna Eleonora à Merlau.

C E N T. epiftolary commerce, and spent the remainder of XVII.

SECT. II. his days in composition and study [5].

PART II. Schade and Bohus.

XXXV. It is not easy to determine, whether JOHN CASPAR SCHADE and GEORGE BOSIUS may be affociated properly with the perfons now mentioned. They were both good men, full of zeal for the happiness and salvation of their brethren: but their zeal was neither directed by prudence, nor tempered with moderation. The former, who was minister at Berlin, propagated several notions that feemed crude and uncouth; and, in the year 1697, inveighed, with the greatest bitterness, against the custom that prevails in the Lutheran church of confessing privately to the clergy. These violent remonstrances excited great commotions, and were even attended with popular tumults. Bosius performed the pastoral functions at Soraw; and, to awaken finners from their fecurity, and prevent their treating, with negligence and indifference, interests that are most important by being eternal, denied that God would continue always propitious and placable with respect to those offenders, whose incorrigible obstinacy he had forefeen from all eternity; or that he would offer them beyond a certain period, marked in his decrees, those succours of grace that are necessary to falvation. This tenet, in the judgment of many grave divines, feemed highly injurious to the boundless mercy of God, and was accordingly refuted and condemned in feveral treatifes; it found, nevertheless, an eminent patron and de[[]s] Petersen wrote his life in German, and it was first published in 8vo. in 1717.—His wife added her Life to it, by way of supplement, in the year 1718. These pieces of biography will satisfy such as are desirous of a particular account of the character, manners, and talents, of this extraordinary pair. For an account of the troubles they excited at Lunenburg, see Jo. Moller, Cimbria Literata, tom. ii. p. 639. the Unschuldige Nachrichten, A. 1748. p. 974. A. 1749. p. 30—200. & passim.

fender in the learned RECHENBELG, professor of CENT. divinity at Leipsic, not to mention others of less note, who appeared in its behalf [7].

XXXVI. Among the controversies of inferior note that divided the Lutheran church, we shall first mention those that broke out between the doctors of Tubingen and Gieffen so early as the year 1616. The principal part of this debate related to the abasement and humiliation, or, to doctors of what divines call, the exinarition of Jesus Christ; and the great point was to know in what this exinanition properly confifted, and what was the precife nature and characteristic of this fingular fituation: That the Man Christ possessed, even in the most dreadful periods of his abasement, the divine properties and attributes he had received in consequence of the hypostatic union, was unanimoufly agreed on by both of the contending parties; but they differed in their fentiments relating to this fubtile and intricate question, Whether Christ, during his mediatorial sufferings and sacerdotal state, really suspended the exertion of these attributes, or only concealed this exertion from the view of mortals? The latter was maintained by the doctors of Tubingen, while those of Giessen were inclined to think, that the exertion of the divine attributes was really suspended in Christ during his humiliation and fufferings. This main question was followed by others, which were much more fubtile than important, concerning the manner in which God is present with all his works, the reasons and foundation of this universal presence, the true cause of the omnipresence of CHRIST'S body, and others of a like intricate and unintelligible nature. The champions that diftinguished themselves on the side of the doctors of Tubing concerning the omniprefence of Christ's flash, between the Tubingen and Gieffen.

SECT. II. PART II.

[[]t] See WALCHIUS'S Introductio ad Controversias, p. 1. cap. iv.

SECT. II. PART II.

CENT. gen were, Lucas Osiander, Melchior Nico-LAS, and THEODORE THUMMIUS. The most eminent of those that adopted the cause of the divines of Gieffen were, BALTHAZAR, MENZER, and Jus-TUS FEVERBORN. The contest was carried on with zeal, learning, and fagacity; it were to be wished that one could add, that it was managed with wisdom, dignity, and moderation. This, indeed, was far from being the case; but such was the spirit and genius of the age, that many things were now treated with indulgence, or beheld with approbation, which the wifdom and decency of succeeding times have justly endeavoured to discountenance and correct. In order to terminate these disagreeable contests, the Saxon divines were commanded, by their fovereign, to offer themselves as arbitrators between the contending parties in the year 1624; their arbitration was accepted, but it did not at all contribute to decide the matters in debate. Their decisions were vague and ambiguous, and were therefore adapted to fatisfy none of the parties. They declared, that they could not entirely approve of the doctrine of either; but infinuated, at the same time, that a certain degree of preference was due to the opinions maintained by the doctors of Giessen [u]. Those of Tubingen rejected the decission of the Saxon arbitrators; and it is very probable, that the divines of Gieffen would have appealed from it also, had not the public calamities, in which Germany began to be involved at this time, suspended this miserable contest, by imposing silence upon the disputants, and leaving them

^[1] Jo. Wolf. Jaeger. Hiftor. Ecclef. ct Polit. Sec. xvii. Decena. iii. p. 329 .- Christ. EBERH. WEIFMANNI Hiftor. Ecclifiaft. Sac. xvii. p. 1178 .- WALCHIUS, loc. cit. p. 206. -See also Caroli Arnold, and the other writers, who have written the Ecclefiastical History of these times.

them in the quiet possession of their respective CENT.

opinions.

XXXVII. Before the ceffation of the controversy now mentioned, a new one was occasioned, The controin the year 1621, by the writings of HERMAN RATHMAN, minister at Dantzie, a man of eminent piety, fome learning, and a zealous patron and of Rathadmirer of Arnda's famous book concerning true Christianity. This good man was suspected by his colleague Corvinus, and feveral others, of entertaining fentiments derogatory from the dignity and power of the facred writings. Thefe fuspicions they derived from a book he published, in the year 1621, Concerning Christ's Kingdom of Grace, which, according to the representations of his adversaries, contained the following doctrine: "That the word of God, as it stands in the sa-" cred writings, hath no innate power to illuminate "the mind, to excite in it a principle of regenera-"tion, and thus to turn it to God; that the external " word sheweth, indeed, the way to falvation, but " cannot effectually lead men to it; but that God " himself, by the ministry of another, and an " internal word, works tuch a change in the minds " of men, as is necessary to render them agreeable " in his fight, and enables them to please him " by their words and actions." This doctrine was reprefented by Corvinus and his affociates as the fame which had been formerly held by Schwenckfeld, and was professed by the Mystics in general. But whoever will be at the pains to examine with attention the various writings of RATHMAN on this fubject, must foon be convinced, that his adverfaries either misunderstood his true fentiments, or wilfully mifreprefented them. His real doctrine may be compalled in the four following points: "First, that the divine word, "contained in the Holy Scriptures, is endowed " with the power of healing the minds of men,

SECT. II. PART II.

verfy occafioned by the writings mannum

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II.

" and bringing them to God: but that, fecondly, " cannot exert this power in the minds of corrupt " men, who refift its divine operation and influ-" ence; and that of confequence, thirdly, it is ab-" folutely necessary, that the word be preceded or " accompanied by some divine energy, which may " prepare the minds of finners to receive it, and " remove those impediments that oppose its effi-" cacy; and fourtbly, that it is by the power of the " boly spirit, or internal word, that the external " word is rendered Mcapable of exerting its effi-" cacy in enlightening and fanctifying the minds " of men [w]." There is, indeed, fome difference between these opinions and the doctrine commonly received in the Lutheran church, relating to the efficacy of the divine word; but a careful perufal of the writings of RATHMAN on this fubject, and a candid examination of his inaccurate expressions, will perfuade the impartial reader, that this difference is neither great nor important; and he will only perceive, that this pious man had not the talent of expressing his notions with order, perspicuity, and precision. However that may have been, this contest grew more general from day to day, and, at length, extended its polemic influence through the whole Lutheran church, the greatest part of whose members followed the example of the Saxon doctors in condemning RATHMAN, while a confiderable number, struck with the lustre of his piety, and persuaded of the innocence of his doctrine, espoused his cause. In the year 1628, when this controverly was at the greatest height, RATHMAN died, and then the warmth and animofity of the contending parties fubfided gradually, and at length ceased.

[[]w] See Molleru's Cimbria Literata, tom. iii. p. 559.-HARKNOCH'S German work, entitled Preuffische Kirchen-Geschichte, book iii. ch. viii. p. 812. ARNOLD's Kirchen und Ketzer-Hiftorie, p. iii. ch. xvi. p. 115. XXXVIII.

XXXVIII. It would be repugnant to the true C E N T. end of history, as well as to all principles of candour and equity, to fwell this enumeration of the controversies that divided the Lutheran church, Private conwith the private disputes of certain individuals troversices. concerning some particular points of doctrine and worship. Some writers have, indeed, followed this method, not fo much with a defign to enrich their histories with a multitude of facts, and to fhew men and opinions in all their various aspects, as with a view to render the Lutherans ridiculous or odious. In the happiest times, and in the best modelled communities, there will always remain fufficient marks of human imperfection, and abundant fources of private contention, at least in the imprudence and mistakes of some, and the impatience and feverity of others; but it must betray a great want of found judgment, as well as of candour and impartiality, to form a general estimate of the state and character of a whole church upon fuch particular inftances of imperfection and error. Certain fingular opinions and modes of expression were censured by many in the writings of TARNOVIUS and AFFELMAN, two divines of Restoch, who were otherwise men of distinguished merit. This, however, will surprise us less, when we consider, that these doctors often expressed themselves improperly, when their sentiments were just; and that, when their expressions were accurate and proper, they were frequently mifunderstood by those who pretended to censure them. Joachim Lutkeman, a man whose reputation was confiderable, and, in many respects, well deferved, took it into his head to deny that CHRIST remained true man during the three days that intervened between his death and refurrection. This fentiment appeared highly erroneous to many; hence arose a contest, which was merely a dispute dispute about words, resembling many other debates, which, like bubbles, are inceffantly fwelling and vanishing on the surface of human life. Of this kind, more especially, was the controversy which, for fome time, exercised the talents of BOETIUS and BALDUIN, professors of divinity, the former at Helmstadt, and the latter at Wittemberg, and had for its subject the following queftion, Whether or no the wicked shall one day be restored to life by the merits of Christ? In the dutchy of Holftein, REINBOTH distinguished himself by the fingularity of his opinions. After the example of CALIXTUS, he reduced the fundamental doctrines of religion within narrower bounds than are usually prescribed to them; he also considered the opinion of those Greeks, who deny that the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Son, as an error of very little consequence. In both these respects, his fentiments were adopted by many; they, however, met with opposition from several quarters, and were cenfured, with peculiar warmth, by the learned John Conrad Danhaver, professor of divinity at Strafburg; in confequence of this, a kind of controversy was kindled between these two eminent men, and was carried on with more vehemence than the nature and importance of the matters in debate could well justify [x]. But these and other contests of this nature must not be admitted into that lift of controversies, from which we are to form a judgment of the internal state of the Lutheran church during this century.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II.

[[]x] For an account of all these controversies in general, see Arnold Histor. Eccles. et Hæret. p. ii. lib. xvii. cap. vi. p. 957. That which was occasioned by Reinboth is amply and circumstantially related by Mollerus, in his Introduction and Historian Chersons Cimbrica, p. ii. p. 190. and in his Gimbria Literata, tom. ii. p. 692.

XXXIX. We cannot fay the fame thing of CENT. certain controversies, which were of a personal rather than a real nature, and related to the orthodoxy or unfoundness of certain men, rather than to the truth or falsehood of certain opinions; for these are somewhat more essentially connected ing to Præwith the internal state and history of the church, Arndt, than the contests last mentioned. It is not unufual for those, who profesfedly embark in the cause of declining piety, and aim, in a solemn, zealous, and public manner, at its revival and restoration, to be elated with high and towering views, and warm with a certain enthusiastic, though noble fervour. This elevation and ardour of mind is by no means a fource of accuracy and precision; on the contrary, it produces many unguarded expressions, and prevents men of warm piety from forming their language by those rules which are necessary to render it clear, accurate, and proper; it frequently dictates expressions and phrases that are pompous and emphatic, but, at the fame time, allegorical and ambiguous; and leads pious and even fensible men to adopt uncouth and vulgar forms of speech, employed by writers whose style is as low and barbarous as their intentions are upright and pious, and whose practical treatifes on religion and morality have nothing recommendable but the zeal and fervour with which they are penned. Perfons of this warm and enthufiaftical turn fall with more facility than any other fet of men into the suspicion of herefy, on account of the inaccuracy of their expressions. This many doctors found to be true, by a difagreeable experience, during the course of this century; but it was, in a more particular manner, the fate of STEPHEN PRÆTO-RIUS, minister of Solzwedel, and of JOHN ARNDT, whose piety and virtue have rendered his memory precious to the friends of true religion. PRÆ-Vol. V. \mathbf{Z} TORIUS

SECT. II. PART II.

C ENT. TORIUS had, fo early as the preceding century, composed certain treatifes, designed to revive a spirit of vital religion, and awaken in the minds of men a zeal for their future and eternal interests. These productions, which were frequently republithed during this century, were highly applauded by many, while, in the judgment of others, they abounded with expressions and sentiments, that were partly faile, and partly adapted by their ambiguity to lead men into error. It cannot be denied, that there are in the writings of PRATO-RIUS fome improper and unguarded expressions, that may too easily deceive the ignorant and unwary, as also several marks of that credulity that borders upon weakness; but those who peruse his works with impartiality will be fully perfuaded of the uprightness of his intentions.

The unfeigned piety and integrity of ARNDT could not fecure him from censure. His famous book concerning true Christianity, which is still perused with the utmost pleasure and edification by many persons eminent for the sanctity of their lives and manners, met with a warm and obstinate opposition. OSIANDER, ROSTIUS, and other doctors, inveighed against it with excessive bitterness, pretended to find in it various defects. and alleged, among other things, that its ftyle was infected with the jargon of the Paracelfifts, Weigelians, and other Myflico-chemical philosophers. It must, indeed, be acknowledged, that this eminent man entertained a high difgust against the philosophy that, in his time, reigned in the schools; nor can it be denied, that he had a high, perhaps an excessive, degree of respect for the chemists, and an ill-placed confidence in their obicure decifions and pompous undertakings. This led him fometimes into conversation with those fantastic philosophers, who, by the power and ministry of fire, pretended to unfold both the fecrets fecrets of nature and the mysteries of religion. C F N T. But, notwithstanding this, he was declared ex- Syeth. I. empt from any errors of moment by a multi- PART II. tude of grave and pious divines, among whom were EGARD, DILGER, BRELER, GERHARD, and DORschæus; and in the iffue the cenfures and oppofition of his adversaries seemed rather to cast a new lustre on his reputation than to cover him with reproach [y]. We may place in the class, now under consideration, VALENTINE WEIGE-LIUS, a minister of the church of Zscopavia in Misnia; for though he died in the preceding century, yet it was in this that the greatest part of his writings were published, and also censured as erroneous and of a dangerous tendency. The fcience of chemistry, which at this time was making fuch a rapid progress in Germany, proved also detrimental to this ecclefiaftic; who, though in the main a man of probity and merit, neglected the paths of right reason, and chose rather to wander in the devious wilds of a chimerical philofophy [z].

XL. There were a fet of fanatics among the Jacob Boh-Lutherans, who in the flights of their enthusiasm Beemen. far furpassed those now mentioned, and who had fuch a high notion of their own abilities as to attempt melting down the prefent form of religion, and casting a new system of piety after a model drawn from their wanton and irregular fancies; it is with fome account of the principal of these fpiritual projectors that we shall conclude the

[[]y] See Arnoldi Hist. Eccles. et Hærctica, p. ii. lib. xvii. cap. vi. p. 940 .- Weismanni Hiftor. Ecclef. Sac. xvii. p. 1174. 1189 .- GODOF. BALTH. SCHARFII Supplementum Historia, Litijque Arndtiana. Wittem. 1727, in 8vo.

^[2] There is an account of Weigelius, more ample than impartial, given by ARNOLD, loc. cit. lib. xvii. cap. xvii. p. 1088.

SECT. II. PART II.

CENT. history of the Lutheran church during this century.

At the head of this vifionary tribe we may place JACOB BEHMEN, a taylor at Gorlitz, who was remarkable for the multitude of his patrons and adverfaries, and whom his admirers commonly called the German Theosophist. This man had a natural propenfity towards the investigation of mysteries, and was fond of abstruse and intricate inquiries of every kind; and having, partly by books and partly by convertation with certain physicians [a], acquired some knowledge of the doctrine of ROBERT FLUDD and the Roscrusians, which was propagated in Germany with great oftentation during this century, he struck out of the element of fire, by the succours of imagination, a species of theology much more obscure than the numbers of Pythagoras, or the intricacies of HERACLITUS. Some have bestowed high praises on this enthusiast, on account of his piety, integrity, and fincere love of truth and virtue; and we shall not pretend to contradict these encomiums. But fuch as carry their admiration of his doctrine to far as to honour him with the character of an inspired messenger of heaven, or even of a judicious and wife philosopher, must be themfelves deceived and blinded in a very high degree; for never did their reign fuch obscurity and confusion in the writings of any mortal, as in the miferable productions of JACOB BEHMEN, which exhibit a motley mixture of chemical terms, crude visions, and mystic jargon. Among other dreams of a diffurbed and eccentric fancy, he entertained the following chimerical notion: " That the " divine grace operates by the fame rules, and follows the fame methods, that the divine pro-" vidence observes in the natural world: and

[[]a] Viz. TOBIAS KOBER and BALTHAZAR WALTHER. " that

"that the minds of men are purged from CENT.
"their vices and corruptions in the fame way Sect. II. "that metals are purified from their drofs;" PART II. and this maxim was the principle of his firetheology. Behmen had a confiderable number of followers, in this century, the most eminent of whom were John Lewis, Giftheil, John Angelus, Werdenhagen, Abraham Franckenberg, Theodore Tzetsch, Paul Felgenhaver, Quirinus Kuhlman, John TACOB ZIMMERMAN; and he has still many votaries and admirers even in our times. was, indeed, a fignal difference between his followers; fome of them retained, notwithstanding their attachment to his extravagant fystem, a certain degree of moderation and good fense; others of them feemed entirely out of their wits, and by their frenzy excited the compassion of those who were the spectators of their conduct; such were Kuhlman and Gichtelius, the former of whom was burnt at Moscow in the year 1684; but, indeed, it may be affirmed in general, that none of the disciples or followers of Behmen propagated his doctrine, or conducted themselves, in such a manner as to do honour either to their mafter or to his cause in the judgment of the wise [b].

XLI. Another

BEHMEN, however, had the good fortune to meet with, in our days, a warm advocate and an industrious disciple in the late well-meaning, but gloomy and visionary, Mr. WIL-

[[]b] It is needless to mention the writers who employed their pens in stemming the torrent of Behmen's enthusiasm. The works of this fanatic are in every body's hands, and the books that were composed to refute them are well known, and to be found every where. All that has been alleged in his favour and defence has been carefully collected by Arnold, who is, generally speaking, peculiarly eloquent in the praises of those whom others treat with contempt. For an account of Kuhlman, and his unhappy fate, see the German work, entitled, Unschuld. Nachricht. A. 1748.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART 11.

The prophets of this age.

XLI. Another class of persons, who deserve to be placed immediately after Behmen, were they, whom a difordered brain perfuaded that they were prophets fent from above, and that they were divinely inspired with the power of foretelling future events. A considerable number of these delirious fanatics arose during the course of this century; and more especially at that juncture when the house of Austria was employed in maintaining its power, in the empire, against the united armies of Sweden, France, and Germany. It is remarkable enough, that the tribe of pretended prophets and diviners is never more numerous than at those critical and striking periods when great revolutions are expected, or fudden and heavy calamities have happened; as fuch periods, and the fcenes they exhibit, inflame the imagination of the fanatic, and may be turned to the profit of the impostor. The most eminent of the fanatical prophets now under confideration, were Nicho-LAS DRABICIUS, CHRISTOPHER KOTTER, CHRI-STINA PONIATOVIA, who found an eloquent defender and patron in John Amos Comenio; not to mention Joachim Greulich, Anne Vet-TER, MARY FROELICH, GEORGE REICHARD, and feveral others, who audaciously assumed the same character. It is not necessary to enter into a more circumftantial detail of the history of this visionary tribe, fince none of them arose to such a degiee of reputation and consequence, as to occafion any confiderable tumults by their predictions. It is sufficient to have observed in general, that, even in this century, there were among the Lutherans certain crazy fanatics, who, under the

LIAM LAW, who was, for many years, preparing a new edition and translation of Behmen's works, which he left behind him ready for the prefs, and which have been published in two vols. 400, fince his decease. N.

impulse of a disordered imagination, assumed the CENT. character and authority of prophets fent from above to enlighten the world $\lceil c \rceil$.

XLII. It will not, however, be improper to Fzekiel mention, somewhat more circumstantially, the Meth, case of those, who, though they did not arrive fel, Paul at that enormous height of folly that leads men to Nigel. pretend to divine infpiration, yet deceived themfelves and deluded others, by entertaining and propagating the strangest fancies and the most monstrous and impious abfurdities. Some time after the commencement of this century, Isaiah STIEFEL and EZEKIEL METH, inhabitants of Thuringia, were observed to throw out the most extraordinary and fhocking expressions while they spoke of themselves and their religious attainments. These expressions, in the judgment of many, amounted to nothing lefs than attributing to themselves the divine glory and majesty, and thus implied a blasphemous, or rather a frenetic, infult on the Supreme Being and his eternal Son. It is nevertheless scarcely credible, however irrational we may suppose them to have been, that these fanatics should have carried their perverse and abfurd fancies to fuch an amazing height; and it would perhaps be more agreeable both to truth and charity to suppose, that they had imi-

XVII.

SECT. II.

[[]c] Arnold is to be commended for giving us an accurate collection of the transactions and visions of these enthusiasts, in the third and fourth parts of his History of Heretics; fince those who are defirous of full information in this matter may eafily fee, by confulting this historian, that the pretended revelations of these prophets were no more than the phantoms of a disordered imagination. A certain pious but ignorant man, named BENEDICT BAHNSEN, who was a native of Holflein, and lived at Amsterdam about the middle of the last century, was so delighted with the writings and predictions of these fanatics, that he collected them carefully and published them. In the year 1670, a catalogue of his library was printed at Δm flerdam, which was full of chemical and fanatical books.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II. tated the pompous and turgid language of the mystic writers in such an extravagant manner, as to give occasion to the heavy accusation above mentioned. Confidering the matter even in this candid and charitable light, we may fee by their examples how much the constant perusal of the writings of the Myflics is adapted to shed darknefs, delufion, and folly into the imagination of weak and ignorant men $\lceil d \rceil$. The reveries of PAUL NAGEL, professor of divinity at Leipsic, were highly abfurd, but of a much less pernicious tendency than these already mentioned. prophetic dreamer, who had received a light tincture of mathematical knowledge, pretended to fee, in the polition of the stars, the events that were to happen in church and state; and, from a view of these celestial bodies, foretold, in a more particular manner, the erection of a new and most holy kingdom in which Christ should reign here upon earth $\lceil e \rceil$.

Christian Huburg, Frederic Breckling, Seidenbecher. XLIII. CHRISTIAN HOBURG, a native of Lunenburg, a man of a turbulent and inconftant spirit, and not more remarkable for this violence than for his duplicity, threw out the most bitter reproaches and investives against the whole Lutheran church without exception [f], and thereby involved himself in various perplexities. He deceived indeed the multitude a long time, by his diffimulation and hypocrify; and by a series of frauds, which he undoubtedly looked upon as lawful, he disguised so well his true character that

[[]d] See Arnold, Historia Eccles. et Hæret. p. iii. cap. iv. p. 32.—Thomasius, in his German work entitled, Historia de Weisheit und Narrheit, vol. i. p. iii. p. 150.

[[]e] Arnold, loc. cit. p. iii. cap. v. p. 55.—Andr. Caroll Memorabilia Ecclefia, Sac. xvii. pars i. lib. iii. cap. iv.

P. 513.

[f] HOBURG, in fome of his petulant and fatirical writings, affumed the names of ELIAS PRÆTORIUS and BERNARD BAUMANN.

he appeared to many, and especially to persons of CENT. a candid and charitable turn, much less con- SECT. II. temptible than he was in reality; and though the PART II. acrimony and violence of his proceedings were condemned, yet they were supposed to be directed, not against religion itself, but against the licentiousness and vices of its professors, and particularly of its ministers. At length, however, the mask fell from the face of this hypocrite, who became an object of general indignation and contempt, and, deferting the communion of the Lutheran church, went over to the Mennonites [g]. There was a striking resemblance between this petulant railer and Frederick Breckling; the latter, however, furpassed even the former in impetuofity and malignity. Breckling had been pastor first in the duchy of Holstein, and afterwards at Zwoll, a city in the United Provinces, where he was deposed from his ministry, and lived a great many years after without being attached to any religious fect or community. There are feveral of his writings still extant, which, indeed, recommend warmly the practice of piety and virtue, and feem to express the most implacable abhorrence of vicious persons and licentious manners; and yet, at the fame time, they demonstrate plainly that their author was destitute of that charity, prudence, meekness, patience, and love of truth, which are the effential and fundamental virtues of a real Christian $\lceil b \rceil$. It is un-

[g] Arnold, loc. cit. p. iii. cap. xiii. p. 130.—Andr. Caroll, loc. cit. vol. i. p. 1065.—Jo. Hornbeck, Summa Controvers. p. 535..—Molleri Cimbria Literata, tom. ii.

P. 337.

[b] Arnold has given an account of Breckling, in his Historia Ecclessafica et Haret, pars iii. p. 148. and pars iv. p. 1103, he has also published some of his writings (p. 1110.) which sufficiently demonstrate the irregularity and exuberance of his fancy. There is a particular account of this degraded pastor given by Mollerus, in his Cimbria Literata, tom. iii. p. 72.

C E N T. doubtedly a just matter of surprise, that these vehement declaimers against the established religion and its ministers, who pretend to be fo much more fagacious and fharp-fighted than their brethren, do not perceive a truth, which the most fimple may learn from daily observation; even that nothing is more odious and difgusting than an angry, petulant, and violent reformer, who comes to heal the diforders of a community, armed, as it were, with fire and fword, with menaces and terrors. It is also to be wondered, that these men are not aware of another consideration equally obvious, namely, that it is fcarcely credible, that a spiritual physician will cure another with entire fuccess of the disorders under which he himfelf is known to labour.

George Laurence Seidenbecher, pastor at Eisfield in Saxony, adopted himself, and propagated among the multitude, the doctrine of the MIL-LENNIUM or thousand years reign of CHRIST upon earth; a doctrine which scarcely ever gains admittance but in difordered brains, and rarely produces any other fruits than incoherent dreams and idle visions. Seidenbecher was censured on account of this doctrine, and deposed from his paftoral charge [i].

Martin Seidel.

XLIV. It would be superfluous to name the other fanatics that deferve a place in the class now before us, fince they almost all laboured under the fame diforder, and the uniformity of their fentiments and conduct was so perfect, that the history of one, a few instances excepted, may, in a great meafure, be confidered as the hiftory of them all. We shall therefore conclude this crazy lift with a fhort account of the very worst of the whole tribe, MARTIN SEIDELIUS, a native CENT. of Silesia, who endeavoured to form a sect in Po- XVII. land towards the conclusion of the preceding cen- PART II. tury and the commencement of this, but could not find followers, even among the Socinians; fo wild were his views, and fo extravagant his notions. This audacious adventurer in religious novelties was of opinion, that God had, indeed, promised a Saviour or Messiah to the Jews; but that this Messiah had never appeared, and never would appear, on account of the fins of the Jewish people, which rendered them unworthy of this great deliverer. From hence he concluded, that it was erroneous to look upon CHRIST as the Messiah; that the only office of Jesus was, to interpret and republish the law of nature, that had been perverted and obscured by the vices, corruptions, and ignorance of men; and that the whole duty of men, and all the obligations of religion; were fulfilled by an obedience to this law, republished and explained by Jesus Christ. To render this doctrine more defencible and specious, or, at least, to get rid of a multitude of arguments and express declarations that might be drawn from the holy Scriptures to prove its abfurdity, he boldly rejected all the books of the New Testament. The fmall number of disciples, that adopted the fancies of this intrepid innovator, were denominated femi-judaizers [k]. Had he appeared in our times, he would have given less offence than at the period in which he lived; for, if we except his fingular notion concerning the MESSIAH, his doctrine was fuch as would at prefent be highly agreeable to many persons in Great Britain, Holland, and other countries [1].

There is a circumstantial account of this man given by ALE. MENO VERPOORTEN, in his Commentat. de vita et inftituti. G. L. Seidenbechert, Gedani, 1739, 4to.

[k] See Gustavi Georgii Zeltneri Historia Crypto Socinismi Alterssini, vol. i. p. 268. 335.

^[1] We are much at a loss to know what Dr. Mosheim means by this infinuation, as also the persons he has in view;

CHAPTER H.

The HISTORY of the REFORMED CHURCH.

SECT. II. L'ART II.

The limits of the Reformed church extended.

C F N T. I. TT has been already observed, that the Re-XVII. Sect. II. formed church, considered in the most comprehensive sense of that term, as forming a whole, composed of a great variety of parts, is rather united by the principles of moderation and fraternal charity, than by a perfect uniformity in doctrine, discipline, and worship. It will, therefore, be proper to take, first a view of those events that related to this great body collectively confidered; and afterwards to enter into a detail of the most memorable occurrences that happened in the particular communities of which it is composed. The principal accessions it received during this century have already been mentioned, when, in the history of the Lutheran church, we related the changes and commotions that happened in the principalities of Hessia and Brandenburg [m]. These, however, were not the only changes that took place in favour of the Reformed > for, on the one hand, it is fufficiently evident, that he cannot mean the Deifts; and, on the other, we know of no denomination of Christians, who boldly reject all the books of the New Testament. Gur author probably meant, that the part of SEI-DEL's doctrine which represents Christ's Mission as enly designed to republish and interpret the Law of Nature, and the whole religious and moral duty of man as confifting in an obedience to this Law, would have been well received by many persons in Great Britain and Holland; but he should have faid so; nothing requires fuch precision as accusations.

> [m] See fection ii. part ii. chap. i. § i, ii. where the History of the Lutheran Church commences with an account of the loss that church suffained by the secession of MAURICE, landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, and JOHN SIGISMUND, clector of Brandenburg, who embraced folemnly the doctrine of the Reformed church, the former in 1604, and the latter in 1614.

> > church.

SECT. II.

PART II.

church. Its doctrine was embraced, about the CENT. commencement of this century, by ADOLPHUS, duke of Holftein, and it was naturally expected, that the fubjects would follow the example of their prince; but this expectation was disappointed, by the death of Adolphus, in the year 1616 [n]. HENRY, duke of Saxony, withdrew also from the communion of the Lutherans, in whose religious principles he had been educated; and, in the year 1688, embraced the doctrine of the Reformed church at Dellaw, in confequence, as fome allege, of the folicitations of his duchefs [0]. In Denmark, about the beginning of this century, there were still a considerable number of persons who fecretly espoused the sentiments of that church, and more especially could never reconcile themselves to the Lutheran doctrine of CHRIST'S bodily presence with the sacrament of the eucharist. They were confirmed in their attachment to the tenets of the Reformed by HEMMINGIUS, and other followers of MELANCTHON, whose secret ministry and public writings were attended with confiderable fuccess. The face of things, however, changed; and the Reformed in Denmark faw their expectations vanish, and their credit fink, in the year 1614, when CANUT Bishop of Gottenburg, who had given too plain intimations

[n] Jo. Molleri Introd. ad Histor. Chersonesi Cimbrica, p. ii. p. 101 .- ERIC. PONTOPPIDANI Annales Ecclesiae Danicæ Diplomatici, tom. iii. p. 691.

[[]o] See Moebii Selecta Disp. Theolog. p. 1137.—The duke of Saxony published to the world a Confession of his Faith, containing the reasons of his change. This piece, which the divines of Leipsick were obliged by a public order to refute, was defended against their attacks by the learned Isaac DE BEAU-SOBRE, at that time pastor at Magdeburg, in a book, entitled. Defense de la Doctrine des Reformées, et en particulier de la Confellion de S. A. S. Mifgr. le Duc HENRY DE SAXE contre un Livre composé par la Faculté de Theologie à Leipfie. Magdeb. 1694, in 810.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II.

of his propenfity to the doctrines of Calvin, was deprived of his episcopal dignity [p]. The progress of the Reformed religion in Africa, Asia, and America, is abundantly known; it was carried into these distant regions by the English and Dutch emigrants, who formed settlements there for the purposes of commerce, and sounded flourishing churches in the various provinces where they fixed their habitations. It is also known, that in several places where Lutheranism was established, the French, German, and British members of the Reformed church were allowed the free exercise of their religion.

The decline of the Reformed church in France,

II. Of all the calamities that tended to diminish the influence, and eclipse the lustre, of the Reformed church, none was more difinal in its circumstances, and more unhappy in its effects, than the deplorable fate of that church in France. From the time of the accession of Henry IV. to the throne of that kingdom, the Reformed church had acquired the form of a body-politic $\lceil q \rceil$. members were endowed with confiderable privileges; they were also secured against insults of every kind by a folemn edict, and were poffeffed of feveral fortified places, particularly the flrong city of Rochelle; in which, to render their fecurity ftill more complete, they were allowed to have their own garrifons. This body-politic was not, indeed, always under the influence and direction of leaders eminent for their prudence, or diftinguished by their permanent attachment to the interests of the crown, and the person of the sovereign. Truth and candour oblige us to acknowledge, that the Reformed conducted themselves, on fome occasions, in a manner inconsistent with the demands of a regular fubordination.

[[]p] PONTOPPIDAN. Annal. Ecclef. Danica, tom. iii. p. 695.
[q] Imperium in imperio, i. e. an empire within an empire.

SECT. II

L'ART II.

times, amidst the broils and tumults of faction, CENA they joined the parties that opposed the government; at others, they took important steps without the king's approbation or confent; nay, they went fo far as to folicit, more than once, without fo much as difguifing their meafures, the alliance and friendship of England and Holland, and formed views which, at least in appearance, were scarcely confiftent with the tranquillity of the kingdom, nor with a proper respect for the authority of its monarch. Hence the contests and civil broils that arose in the year 1621, and subsisted long, between Lewis XIII. and his protestant subjects; and hence the severe and despotic maxim of RICHLIEU, the first minister of that monarch, that the kingdom of France could never enjoy the fweets of peace, nor the fatisfaction that is founded upon the affurance of public fafety, before the Protestants were deprived of their towns and strong-holds, and before their rights and privileges, together with their ecclefiastical polity, were crushed to pieces, and totally suppressed. This haughty minister, after many violent efforts and hard ftruggles, obtained, at length, his purpose; for, in the year 1628, the town of Rockelle, the chief bulwark of the Reformed interest in France, was taken, after a long and difficult fiege, and annexed to the crown. From this fatal event, the Reformed party in France, defenceless and naked, dates its decline; fince, after the reduction of their chief city, they had no other resource than the pure clemency and generofity of their fovereign [r]. Those who judge of the re-

[[]r] See LE CLERC Vie de Cardinal RICHLIEU, tom. i. p. 69. 77. 177. 199. 269.—LE VASSOR, Histoire de Louis XIII. tom. iii. p. 676. tom. iv. p. 1. and the following volumes. See also the Memoirs of Sully (the friend and confident of HENRY IV., who, though a Protestant, acknowledges frankly the errors of his party), vol. iii, iv, v.

ENT. duction of this place by the maxims of civil po-Sect. II. licy, considered the conduct of the French court PART II. as entirely confistent with the principles both of wisdom and justice: since nothing can be more detrimental to the tranquillity and fafety of the nation, than a body-politic erected in its bosom. independent on the supreme authority of the state, and fecured against its influence or inspection by an external force. And had the French monarch, fatisfied with depriving the Protestants of their ftrong-holds, continued to maintain them in the possession of that liberty of conscience, and that free exercise of their religion, for which they had fhed fo much blood, and to the enjoyment of which their eminent fervices to the house of Bourbon had given them fuch a fair and illustrious title, it is highly probable, they would have borne with patience this infraction of their privileges, and the lofs of that liberty that had been confirmed to them by the most folemn edicts.

The injurious and tvrannical treatment it receives from the French court.

III. But the court of France, and the despotic views of its minister, were not satisfied with this fuccess. Having destroyed that form of civil polity that had been annexed to the Reformed church as a fecurity for the maintenance of its religious privileges, and was afterwards confidered as detrimental to the supreme authority of the flate, they proceeded still further, and, regardless of the royal faith, confirmed by the most folemn declarations, perfidiously invaded those privileges of the church that were merely of a spiritual and religious nature. At first, the court, and the minifters of its tyranny, put in practice all the arts of infinuation and perfuafion, in order to gain over the heads of the Reformed church, and the more learned and celebrated ministers of that communion. Pathetic exhortations, alluring promifes, artful interpretations of those doctrines of popery that were most disagreeable to the Protestants; in a word, every infidious method was em- C = N T. Ployed, to conquer their aversion to the church S = T T. Of Rome. RICHLIEU exhausted all the resources P = T T. of his dexterity and artifice, and put into execution, with the most industrious assiduity, all the means that he thought the most adapted to seduce the Protestants into the Romish communion. When all these stratagems were observed to produce little or no effect, barbarity and violence were employed to extirpate and defroy a fet of men, whom mean perfidy could not feduce, and whom weak arguments were infufficient to convince. The most inhuman laws that the blind rage of bigotry could dictate, the most oppressive measures that the ingenious efforts of malice could invent, were put in execution, to damp the courage of a party, that were become odious by their resolute adherence to the dictates of their confciences, and to bring them by force under the yoke of Rome. The French bishops distinguished themselves by their intemperate and unchristian zeal in this horrid scene of perfecution and cruelty; many of the Protestants sunk under the weight of despotic oppression, and yielded up their faith to armed legions, that were fent to convert them; feveral fled from the ftorm, and deferted their families, their friends, and their country; and by far the greatest part persevered, with a noble and heroic constancy, in the purity of that religion, which their ancestors had delivered, and happily feparated, from the manifold superstitions of a corrupt and idolatrous church.

IV. When at length every method which arti- Theediatof fice or perfidy could invent had been practifed in Nantes revain against the Protestants under the reign of Lewis XIV., the bishops and Jesuits, whose counfels had a peculiar influence in the cabinet of that prince, judged it necessary to extirpate, by fire and sword, this resolute people; and thus to ruin, as Vol. V. it

CENT. it were by one mortal blow, the cause of the Re-XVII. SECT. II. formation in France. Their infidious arguments PART II. and importunate folicitations had fuch an effect upon the weak and credulous mind of Lewis, that, in the year 1685, trampling on the most folemn obligations, and regardless of all laws, human and divine, he revoked the Editt of Nantes; and thereby deprived the Protestants of the liberty of ferving God according to their consciences. This revocation was accompanied, indeed, with the applause of Rome; but it excited the indignation even of many Roman Catholics, whose bigotry had not effaced or suspended, on this occasion, their natural sentiments of generofity and justice. It was, moreover, followed by a measure still more tyrannical and shocking; even an express order, addressed to all the Reformed churches, to embrace the Romish faith. The confequences of this cruel and unrighteous proceeding were highly detrimental to the true interests and the real prosperity of the French nation [s], by the prodigious emigrations it occafioned among the Protestants, who fought, in various parts of Europe, that religious liberty, and that humane treatment, which their mother-country had fo cruelly refused them. Those among them, whom the vigilance of their enemies guarded so closely as to prevent their flight, were exposed to the brutal rage of an unrelenting soldierv.

[[]s] See the Life of Isaac de Beausobre (composed by the ingenious Armand de la Chapelle in French, and subjoined to Beausobre's Remarques Historiques, Critiques, et Philologiques fur le Nouveau Testament), p. 259.

Some late hireling writers, employed by the Jesuits, have been audacious enough to plead the cause of the Revocation of the edict of Nantes. But it must be observed, to the honour of the French nation, that these impotent attempts, to justify the measures of a perfecuting and unrelenting priesthood, have been treated almost universally at Paris with indignation and contempt.

PART II.

diery, and were affailed by every barbarous form CENT. of perfecution that could be adapted to fubdue SECT. II. their courage, exhauft their patience, and thus engage them to a feigned and external profession of popery, which in their consciences they beheld with the utmost aversion and disgust. This crying act of perfidy and injustice in a prince, who, on other occasions, gave evident proofs of his generofity and equity, is sufficient to shew, in their true and genuine colours, the spirit of the Romish church and of the Roman pontifs, and the manner in which they stand affected to those whom they confider as Heretics. It is peculiarly adapted to convince the impartial and attentive observer, that the most solemn oaths, and the most sacred treaties, are never looked upon by this church and its pontifs as respectable and obligatory, when the violation of them may contribute to advance their interests, or to accomplish their views.

V. The Waldenses, who lived in the vallies of The fuffer-Piedmont, and had embraced the doctrine, difci- Waldenfes pline, and worship of the church of Geneva, were and Provedoppressed and persecuted, in the most barbarous Palatinate. and inhuman manner, during the greatest part of this century, by the ministers of Rome. This perfecution was carried on with peculiar marks contempt. They who are defirous of feeing a true state of the losses the French nation sustained, by the revocation of the famous edict now mentioned, have only to confult the curious and authentic account of the flate of that nation, taken from memorials drawn up by intendants of the feveral provinces, for the use of the Duke of Burgundy, and published in the year 1727, in two volumes in folio, under the following title: Etet de la France, extrait par M. le Comte de BOULAINVILLIERS des Memoires drefsée par les Intendans du Royaume, par l'Ordre du Roi Louis XIV., à la Solicitation du Duc de Bourgogne. See also VOLTAIRE, Sur la Tolerance, p. 41. and 201. And, for an account of the conduct of the French court towards the Protestants at that dismal period, see the incomparable memorial of the learned and pious CLAUDE, entitled, Plaintes des Protestans de France, p. 12-85. edit. of Cologn.

ings of the

SECT. 11,

CENT. of rage and enormity in the years 1655, 1686, and 1696, and feemed to portend nothing less PART II. than the total destruction and entire extinction of that unhappy nation [t]. The most horrid scenes of violence and bloodshed were exhibited on this theatre of papal tyranny; and the fmall numbers of the Waldenses that furvived them, are indebted for their existence and support, precarious and uncertain as it is, to the continual intercession made for them by the English and Dutch governments, and also by the Swifs cantons, who never cease to solicit the clemency of the Duke of Savoy in their behalf.

The church of the Palatinate, which had been long at the head of the Reformed churches in Germany, declined apace from the year 1685, when a Roman Catholic prince was raifed to that electorate. This decline became at length fo great, that, instead of being the first, it was the least considerable of all the Protestant assemblies in that country.

The state of leters and philosophy in the Retormed church.

VI. The eminent and illustrious figure that the principal members of the Reformed church made in the learned world is too well known, and the reputation they acquired, by a fuccessful application to the various branches of literature and science, is too well established, to require our entering into a circumstantial detail of that matter. We shall

[t] LEGER, Histoire Generale des Eglises Vaudoises, p. ii. c. vi. p. 72 .- GILLES, Histoire Ecclesiast. des Eglises Vaudoises, ch. xlix. p. 353 .- There is a particular history of the perfecution fuffered by these victims of papal cruelty in the year 1686, which was published in Svo at Rotterdam, in the year 1688.

See also a pamphlet, entitled, An Account of the late Perfecutions of the Waldenses by the Duke of Sayoy and the French King in the year 1086, published at Oxford in 4to in 1688. See likewife a particular detail of the miferies endured by these unfortunate objects of papal persecution in the years 1655, 1652, 1663, and 1636, related by PETER BOYER, in his history of the Vaudois, ch. 12-21. p. 72, &c.

alfo

also pass in silence the names of those celebrated CENT. men who have acquired immortal fame by their Sect. II. writings, and transmitted their eminent usefulness PARTII. to fucceeding times in their learned and pious productions. Out of the large lift of these famous authors that adorned the Reformed church, it would be difficult to felect the most eminent; and this is a fufficient reason for our silence [u] The fupreme guide and legislator of those that applied themselves to the study of philosophy had been ARISTOTLE, who, for a long time, reigned unrivalled in the Reformed, as well as in the Lutheran fchools; and was exhibited, in both, not in his natural and genuine aspect, but in the motley and uncouth form in which he had been dreffed up by the scholastic doctors. But when GASSENDI and Des Cartes appeared, the Stagirite began to decline, and his fame and authority diminished gradually from day to day. Among the French and Dutch, many adopted the Cartefian philosophy at its first dawn; and a considerable number [u] The list of the eminent divines and men of learning that were ornaments to the Reformed church in the feventeenth century, is indeed extremely ample. Among those that adorned Great Britain, we shall always remember, with peculiar veneration, the immortal names of Newton, Barrow, Cudworth, Boyle, Chillingworth, Ulber, Bedell, Hall, Pocock, Fell, Lightfoot, Hammond, Calamy, Walton, Baxter, Pearson, Stilling fleet, Mede, Parker, Oughtred, Burnet, Tillotfon, and many others well known in the literary world. In Germany we find Parcus, Scultet, Fabricius Alting, Pelargus, and Bergius. In Switzerland and Geneva, Hospinian, the two Buxtorfs, Hottinger, Heiddeger, and Turretin. In the churches and academies of Holland, we meet with the following learned divines: Drujus, Amama, Gomer, Rivet, Cloppenburg, Vossius, Cocceius, Voetius, Des Marets, Heidan, Momma, Burman, Wittichius, Hoornbeck, the Spanbeims, Le Moyne, De Mastricht, and others. Among the French doctors, we may reckon Cameron, Chamier, Du Moulin, Mestrezat, Blondel, Drelincourt, Daillé, Amyraut, the two Cappels, Du la Place, Gamstole, Croy, Morus, Le Blanc, Pajon, Bochart, Claude, Alix, Jurieu, Basnage, Abbadie, Beausobre, Lenfant, Martin, Des Vignoles, &c.

of

XVII. PART II.

CENT. of the English embraced the principles of GAS-SENDI, and were fingularly pleafed with his prudent and candid manner of investigating truth. The Aristotelians every where, and more especially in Holland, were greatly alarmed at this revolution in the philosophical world, and fet themselves, with all their vigour, to oppose its progress. They endeavoured to persuade the people, that the cause of truth and religion must suffer considerably by the efforts that were made to dethrone ARISTOTLE, and bring into difrepute the doctrine of his interpreters; but the principal cause of their anxiety and zeal, was the apprehension of losing their places in the public schools; a thought which they could not bear with any degree of patience [w]. However, the powerful Justre of truth, which unfolded daily more and more its engaging charms, and the love of liberty, which had been held in chains by Peripatetic tyranny, obliged this obstinate sect to yield, and reduced them to filence; and hence it is, that the doctors of the Reformed church carry on, at this day, their philosophical inquiries with the fame freedom that is observable among the Lutherans. It may, indeed, be a question with fome, whether ARISTOTLE be not, even yet, fecretly revered in some of the English Universities. It is at least certain, that, although under the government of Charles II., and the two succeeding reigns, the mathematical philosophy had made a most extensive progress in Great Britain, there were, nevertheless, both at Oxford and Cambridge, fome doctors, who preferred the ancient system of the schools before the new discoveries now under confideration.

Interpreters and expositors of Scripture.

VII. All the interpreters and expositors of Scripture that made a figure in the Reformed

[TU] See BAILLET, Vie de DES CARTES, passim.

church

church about the commencement of this century, followed fcrupuloufly the method of CALVIN in their illustrations of the facred writings, and unfolded the true and natural fignification of the words of Scripture, without perplexing their brains to find out deep mysteries in plain expressions, or to force, by the inventive efforts of fancy, a variety of fingular notions from the metaphorical language that is frequently used by the inspired writers. This universal attachment to the method of CALVIN was, indeed, confiderably diminished, in process of time, by the credit and influence of two celebrated commentators, who ftruck out new paths in the fphere of facred criticism. These were Hugo Grotius and John Cocceius. The former departed less from the manner of interpretation generally received than the latter. Like CALVIN, he followed, in his commentaries both in the Old and New Testament, the literal and obvious fignification of the words employed by the facred writers; but he differed confiderably from that great man in his manner of explaining the predictions of the prophets. The hypothesis of Grotius, relating to that important subject, amounts to this: "That " the predictions of the ancient prophets were all " accomplished, in the events to which they di-" rectly pointed, before the coming of CHRIST; " and that therefore the natural and obvious " fense of the words and phrases, in which they " were delivered, does not terminate in our bleffed " Lord; but that in certain of these predictions, " and more especially in those which the writers " of the New Testament apply to Christ, there " is, besides the literal and obvious fignification, " a hidden and mysterious sense, that lies con-" cealed under the external mask of certain perfons, certain events, and certain actions, which A a 4

CENT. XVII. SECT. I. PART II. " are representatives of the person, ministry, sufferings, and merits of the Son of God."

The method of Cocceius was entirely different from this. He looked upon the whole history of the old Testament as a perpetual and uninterrupted representation or mirrour of the history of the divine Saviour, and of the Christian Church; he maintained, moreover, that all the prophecies have a literal and direct relation to CHRIST; and he finished his romantic system, by laying it down as a certain maxim, that all the events and revolutions that shall happen in the church, until the end of time, are prefigured and pointed out, though not all with the fame degree of evidence and perspicuity, in different places of the Old Testament [x]. These two eminent commentators had each his zealous disciples and followers. The Arminians in general, many of the English and French divines, together with those warm votaries of ancient Calvinism who are called Voetfians (from their chief GISBERT VOET, the great adversary of Cocceius), all adopted the method of interpreting Scripture introduced by GROTIUS. On the other hand, many of the Dutch, Swifs, and Germans, were fingularly delighted with the learned fancies of Cocceius. There are, however, still great numbers of prudent and impartial divines, who, confidering the extremes into which these two eminent critics have run, and disposed to profit by what is really folid in both their

fystems,

[[]x] It is become almost a proverbial saying, that in the Beoks of the Old Testament Cocceius sinds Christ every where, while Grotius meets him no where. The first part of this saying is certainly true; the latter much less so: for itappears, with sufficient evidence, from the Commentaries of Grotius, that he finds Christ prefigured in many places of the Old Testament, not, indeed, directly in the letter of the prophecies, where Cocceius discovers him, but mysterically, under the appearance of certain persons, and in the secret sense of certain transactions.

S: CT. 11.

PART II.

fystems, neither reject nor embrace their opinions CENT. in the lump, but agree with them both in fome things, and differ from them both in others. is further to be observed, that neither the followers of Grotius nor of Cocceius are agreed among themselves, and that these two general classes of expositors may be divided into many subordinate ones. A confiderable number of English divines of the Episcopal church refused to adopt the opinions, or to respect the authority, of these modern expositors; they appealed to the decisions of the primitive fathers; and maintained, that the facred writings ought always to be underflood in that fense only, which has been attributed to them by these ancient doctors of the rising church [y].

[r] These have been confuted by the learned Dr. WHITBY, in his important work, Concerning the Interpretation of Scripture after the Manner of the Fathers, which was published at London in 8vo, in the year 1714, under the following title : Dissertatio de Scripturarum Interpretatione secundum Patrum Commentarios, &c. - In this differention, which was the fore-runner of the many remarkable attempts that were afterwards made to deliver the right of private judgment, in matters of religion, from the restraints of human authority, the judicious author has shewn, first, that the Holy Scripture is the only rule of faith, and that by it alone we are to judge of the doctrines that are necessary to falvation; fecondly, that the fathers, both of the primitive times and also of succeeding ages, are extremely deficient and unfuccefsful in their explications of the facred writings; and, thirdly, that it is impoffible to terminate the debates that have been raifed concerning the Holy Trinity, by the opinions of the fathers, the decifions of councils, or by any tradition that is really universal. The contradictions, abfurdities, the romantic conceits and extravagant fancies, that are to be found in the commentaries of the fathers, were never reprefented in fuch a ridiculous point of view as they are in this performance. The worst part of the matter is, that fuch a production as Dr. WHITBY's, in which all the mistakes of these ancient expositors are culled out and compiled with fuch care, is too much adopted to prejudice young students even against what may be good in their writings, and thus difgust them against a kind of study, which, when conducted with impartiality and prudence, has its uses. It is the infirmity of our nature to be fond of extremes.

VIII. The

CENT.
XVII.
SECT. II.
FART II.

dactic theology in the Reformed

church.

VIII. The doctrines of Christianity, which had been so fadly disfigured among the Lutherans by the obscure jargon and the intricate tenets of the scholastic philosophy, met with the same fate in the Reformed churches. The first successful effort, that prevented these churches from falling entirely under the Arifotelian yoke, was made by the Arminians, who were remarkable for expounding, with simplicity and perspicuity, the truths and precepts of religion, and who cenfured, with great plainness and severity, those ostentatious doctors, who affected to render them obscure and unintelligible, by expressing them in the terms, and reducing them under the classes and divisions, used in the Ichools. The Cartesians and Cocceians contributed also to deliver theology from the chains of the Peripatetics; though it must be allowed, that it had not, in some respects, a much better fate in the hands of these its deliverers. The Cartefians applied the principles and tenets of their philosophy in illustrating the doctrines of the Gospel; the Cocceians imagined, that they could not give a more fublime and engaging afpect to the Christian religion, than by representing it under the notion of a covenant entered into between God and man [z]; and both these manners of proceeding

[2] It is somewhat surprising, that Dr. Mosheim should mention this circumstance as an invention of Cocceius, or as a manner of speaking peculiar to him. The representation of the Gospel-dispensation under the idea of a Covenant, whether this representation be literal or metaphorical, is to be found, almost every where, in the Epistles of St. Paul, and the other Apostles, though very rarely (scarcely more than twice) in the Gospels. This phraseology has also been adopted by Christians of almost all denominations. It is, indeed, a manner of speaking that has been grossly abused by those divines, who, urging the metaphor too closely, exhibit the sublime transactions of the divine wisdom under the narrow and imperfect forms of human tribunals; and thus lead to false notions of proceeding were difliked by the wifeft and most CENT. learned divines of the Reformed church. They SECT. II. complained with reason, that the tenets and dif- PART II. tinctions of the Cartefian philosophy had as evident a tendency to render the doctrines of Christianity obscure and intricate as the abstruse terms, and the endless divisions and subdivisions of the Peripatetics. They observed also, that the metaphor of a covenant, applied to the Christian religion, must be attended with many inconveniencies, by leading uninftructed minds to form a variety of ill-grounded notions, which is the ordinary confequence of straining metaphors; and that it must contribute to introduce into the colleges of divinity the captious terms, distinctions, and quibbles, that are employed in the ordinary courts of justice; and thus give rise to the most trifling and ill-judged discussions and debates about religious matters. Accordingly, the greatest part both of the British and French doctors, refusing to admit the intricacies of Cartefianism, and the imagery of Cocceius, into their theological fystem, followed the free, easy, and unaffected method of the Arminian divines, in illustrating the truths, and enforcing the duties of Christianity.

IX. We have had formerly occasion to observe, The flate of that Dr. William Ames, a Scots divine, was one ligion and of the first among the Reformed who attempted morality. to treat morality as a separate science, to consider the springs of action, as well as of the dispensations and attributes of the Supreme Being. We have remarkable instances of this abuse, in a book lately translated into English, I mean, the Osconomy of the Cornenants, by WITSIUS, in which that learned and pious man, who has defervedly gained an eminent reputation by other valuable productions, has inconfiderately introduced the captious, formal, and trivial terms, employed in human courts, into his descriptions of the stupendous scheme of redemption.

SECT. II. PART II.

CENT. it abstractedly from its connexion with any particular fystem of doctrine, and to introduce new light, and a new degree of accuracy and precision, into this master-science of life and manners. The attempt was laudable, had it been well executed; but the fystem of this learned writer was dry, theoretical, and fubtile, and was thus much more adapted to the instruction of the studious than to the practical direction of the Christian. The Arminians, who are known to be much more zealous in enforcing the duties of Christianity than in illustrating its truth's, and who generally employ more pains in directing the will than in enlightening the understanding, engaged several authors of note to exhibit the precepts and obligations of morality in a more useful, practical, and popular manner; but the English and French surpassed all the moral writers of the Reformed church in penetration, folidity, and in the eafe, freedom, and perspicuity, of their method and compositions. Moses Amyraut, a man of a found understanding and subtile genius, was the first of the French divines who diftinguished themselves in this kind of writing. He composed an accurate and elaborate system of morality, in a style, indeed, that is now become obsolete; and those more moderate French writers, fuch as LA PLA-CETTE and PICTET, who acquired fuch a high and eminent reputation on account of their moral writings, owe to the excellent work now mentioned a confiderable part of their glory. While England groaned under the horrors and tumults of a civil war, it was chiefly the Presbyterians and Independents that employed their talents and their pens in promoting the cause of practical religion. During this unhappy period, indeed, these doctors were remarkable for the austere gravity of their manners, and for a melancholy complexion and turn of mind; and these appeared abundantly in their

SECT. II.

their compositions. Some of them were penned CENT. with fuch rigour and feverity, as discovered either a total ignorance of the prefent imperfect state of humanity, or an entire want of all fort of indulgence for its unavoidable infirmities. Others were composed with a spirit of enthusiasin, that betrayed an evident propenfity to the doctrine of the Mystics. But when Hobbes appeared, the scene changed. A new set of illustrious and excellent writers arose to defend the truths of religion, and the obligations of morality, against this author, who aimed at the destruction of both, fince he subjected the unchangeable nature of religion to the arbitrary will of the fovereign, and endeavoured to efface the eternal distinction that there is between moral good and evil. Cub-WORTH, CUMBERLAND, SHARROCK, and others, [a], alarmed at the view of a fystem so false in its principles, and fo pernicious in its effects, rendered eminent fervice to the cause of religion and morals by their immortal labours, in which, arising to the first principles of things, and opening the primitive and eternal fountains of truth and good, they illustrated clearly the doctrines of the one with the fairest evidence, and established the obligations of the other on the firmest foundations.

X. About the commencement of this century, the academy of Geneva was in fuch high repute trovernes concerning among the Reformed churches, that it was refort- Predeftinaed to from all quarters by fuch as were defirous of a learned education; and more especially by those students of theology, whose circumstances in life permitted them to frequent this famous feminary [b]. Hence it very naturally happened,

The con-

[a] See LELAND'S View of the Deiftical Writers, vol.i.p. 43. [b] The luftre and authority of the academy of Geneva began gradually to decline, from the time that, the United Provinces being formed into a free and independent republic, univerfities were founded at Leyden, Francker, and Utrecht.

that

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II.

that the opinions of CALVIN, concerning the Decrees of God and Divine Grace, became daily more univerfal, and were gradually introduced every where into the schools of learning. There was not, however, any public law or confession of faith that obliged the pastors of the Reformed churches, in any part of the world, to conform their fentiments to the theological doctrines that were adapted and taught at Geneva [c]. And accordingly there were many, who either rejected entirely the doctrine of that academy on these intricate points, or received it with certain restrictions and modifications. Nav. even those who were in general attached to the theological system of Geneva, were not perfectly agreed about the manner of explaining the doctrine relating to the divine decrees. The greatest part were of opinion, that God had only permitted the first man to fall into transgression, without positively predetermining his fall. But others went much further, and, prefumptuously forgetting their own ignorance on the one hand, and the wisdom and equity of the divine counsels on the other, maintained, that God, in order to exercise and display his awful justice and his free mercy, had decreed from all eternity the transgression of ADAM; and so ordered the course of events, that our first parents could not possibly avoid their unhappy fall. Those that held this latter fentiment were denominated Supralapfarians, to diftinguish them from the Sublapfarian doctors, who maintained the doctrine of permission already mentioned.

The Arminian schism. XI. It is remarkable enough, that the Supralapfarian and Sublapfarian divines forgot their debates and differences, as matters of little confe- CENT. quence; and united their force against those who thought it their duty to represent the Deity, as PART II. extending his goodness and mercy to all mankind. This gave rife, foon after the commencement of this century, to a deplorable fchifin, which all the efforts of human wifdom have fince been unable to heal. JAMES ARMINIUS, professor of di-vinity in the university of Leyden, rejected the doctrine of the church of Geneva, in relation to the deep and intricate points of predeffination and grace; and maintained, with the Lutherans, that God has excluded none from falvation by an abfolute and eternal decree. He was joined in these fentiments by feveral persons in Holland, that were eminently diffinguished by the extent of their learning and the dignity of their stations; but he met with the warmest opposition from Francis GOMAR his colleague, and from the principal professors in the Dutch universities. The magiitrates exhorted the contending parties to moderation and charity; and observed, that, in a free ftate, their respective opinions might be treated with toleration, without any detriment to the effential interests of true religion. After long and tedious debates, which were frequently attended with popular tumults and civil broils, this intricate controverfy was, by the councils and authority [d] of MAURICE, prince of Orange, referred to the decision of the church, assembled, in a general fynod at Dort, in the year 1618. The most eminent divines of the United Provinces, and not only fo, but learned deputies from the churches but by that of the States-general, that the national fynod was affembled at Dort. The flates were not indeed unanimous; three of the feven provinces protefled against the holding of this fyned, viz. Holland, Utrecht, and Overyfel.

[[]c] See, for a full demonstration of this assertion, GROTIUS'S Applopericus, &c. as also several treatises, written in Dutch, by THEOD. VOLKH. COORNERT, of whom ARNOLDT makes particular mention in his Historia Eccles, et Harret. tom. ii.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II.

of England, Scotland, Switzerland, Bremen, Heffia, and the Palatinate, were prefent at this numerous and folemn affembly. It was by the fentence of these judges, that the Arminians lost their cause, and were declared corrupters of the true religion. It must be observed, at the same time, that the doctors of Geneva, who embraced the Sublapfarian fystem, triumphed over their adversaries in this fynod. For though the patrons of the Supralapfarian cause were far from being contemptible either in point of number or of abilities; yet the moderation and equity of the British divines prevented the fynod from giving its fanction to the opinions of that prefumptuous fect. Nor indeed would even the Sublapfarians have gained their point, or obtained to the full the accomplishment of their defires, had the doctors of Bremen, who for weighty reasons were attached to the Lutherans, been able to execute their purposes [e].

The effects of this (chitim.

XII. It is greatly to be doubted, whether this victory gained over the Arminians, was, upon the whole, advantageous or detrimental to the church of Geneva in particular, and to the Reformed church in general. It is at least certain, that, after the fynod of Dort, the doctrine of abfolute decrees loft ground from day to day; and its patrons were put to the hard necessity of holding fraternal communion with those whose doctrine was either professedly Arminian, or at least nearly resembled it. The leaders of the vanquished Arminians were eminently diftinguished by their eloquence, fagacity, and learning; and being highly exasperated by the injurious and oppreflive treatment they met with, in confequence of their condemnation, they defended themselves, and attacked their adversaries with such spirit CENT. and vigour, and also with such dexterity and elo- SECT. II. quence, that multitudes were perfuaded of the PART II. justice of their cause. It is particularly to be obferved, that the authority of the fynod of Dort was far from being univerfally acknowledged among the Dutch; the provinces of Friesland, Zealand, Utrecht, Guelderland, and Groningen, could not be perfuaded to adopt its decifions; and though, in the year 1651, they were at length gained over so far as to intimate, that they would fee with pleasure the Reformed religion maintained upon the footing on which it had been placed and confirmed by the fynod of Dort, yet the most eminent adepts in Belgic jurisprudence deny that this intimation has the force or character of a law $\lceil f \rceil$.

[[]e] We shall give, in the History of the Arminians, a list of the writers that appeared in this controvers; as also a more particular account of the transactions of the synod of Dort.

In England, the face of religion changed confiderably, in a very little time after the famous fynod now mentioned; and this change, which was entirely in favour of Arminianism, was principally effected by the counfels and influence of WILLIAM LAUD, archbishop of Canterbury. This revolution gave new courage to the Arminians; and, from that period to the present time, they have had the pleature of feeing the decisions and doctrines of the fynod of Dort, relating to the points in debate between them and the Calvinists, treated, in England, with fomething more than mere indifference, beheld by some with aversion, and by others with contempt [g]. And indeed, if we confider the genius and spirit of the church of England during this period, we shall plainly see,

[[]f] See the very learned and illustrious President By NKERSновк's Quastiones Juris publici, lib. ii. cap. xviii.

[[]g] SEV. LINTRUPII Differtatio de Contemptu Concilii Dordrac. in Anglia, in Differt. Theologicis HECT. GODOFR. MASII, tom. i. n. xix.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II. that the doctrine of the Gomarists, concerning Predestination and Grace, could not meet there with a favourable reception, since the leading doctors of that church were zealous in modelling its doctrine and discipline after the sentiments and institutions that were received in the primitive times, and since those early fathers, whom they followed with a profound submission, had never presumed, before Augustine, to set limits to the extent of the divine grace and mercy.

The Reformed churches in France feemed, at first, disposed to give a favourable reception to the decisions of this famous fynod; but, as these decifions were highly displeasing to the votaries of Rome among whom they lived, and kindled anew their rage against the Protestants, the latter thought it their duty to be circumspect in this matter; and, in process of time, their real sentiments, and the doctrines they taught, began to differ extremely from those of the Gomarists. The churches of Brandenberg and Bremen, which made a confiderable figure among the Reformed in Germany, would never fuffer their doctors to be tied down to the opinions and tenets of the Dutch divines. And thus it happened, that the liberty of private judgment (with respect to the doctrines of Predeftination and Grace), which the spirit that prevailed among the divines of Dort feemed fo much adapted to suppress or discourage, acquired rather new vigour, in consequence of the arbitrary proceedings of that affembly; and the Reformed church was immediately divided into Universalists, Semiuniversalists, Supralapsarians, and Sublapfarians, who, indeed, notwithstanding their diffentions, which fometimes become violent and tumultuous, live generally in the exercise of mutual toleration, and are reciprocally restrained by many reasons from indulging a spirit of hostility and persecution. What is still more remarkable, and and therefore ought not to be passed over in si- CENT. lence, we see the city of Geneva, which was the SECT. II. parent, the nurse, and the guardian of the doc- PART II. trine of Absolute Predestination, and Particular Grace, not only put on fentiments of charity, forbearance, and esteem for the Arminians, but become itself almost so far Arminian, as to deserve a place among the churches of that communion.

XIII. While the Reformed churches in France The partiyet fubfifted, its doctors departed, in feveral cular tenets of the Repoints, from the common rule of faith that was formed churches in received in the other churches of their communion. This, as appears from feveral circumftances, was, in a great measure, owing to their defire of diminishing the prejudices of the Romancatholics against them, and of getting rid of a part of the odious conclusions which were drawn by their adversaries from the doctrines of Dort, and laid to their charge with that malignity which popish bigotry so naturally inspires. Hence we find in the books that were composed by the doctors of Saumur and Sedan, after the fynod of Dort, many things which feem conformable, not only to the sentiments of the Lutherans, concerning Grace, Predestination, the Person of Christ, and the Efficacy of the sacraments, but also to certain peculiar opinions of the Romish church. This moderation may be dated from the year 1615, when the opinion of JOHN PISCATOR, pastor at Herborn, concerning the Obedience of Christ, was tacitly adopted, or at least pronounced free from error, by the fynod of the ifle of France [b]; though it had been formerly condemned and rejected in feveral preceding affemblies of the fame nature [i]. Piscator maintained, that it was not by his obedience to the divine law that CHRIST made a fatisfaction to that law in our stead, fince PARTIL this obedience was his duty confidered as a man; and therefore, being obliged to obey this law himself, his observance of it could not merit any thing for others from the Supreme Being. This opinion, as every one may fee, tended to confirm the doctrine of the Romish church, concerning the Merit of good works, the Natural power of man to obey the commands of God, and other points of a like nature [ii]. These less important concessions were > livr. xii. tom. ii. p. 268. where this prelate, with his usual malignity and bitterness, reproaches the Protestants with their inconstancy. The learned BASNAGE has endeavoured to defend the Reformed churches against this charge, in the second volume of his Histoire de l'Eglise, p. 1533. But this defence is not fatisfactory. To Dr. Mosheim, who speaks more than once of the Reformed church and its doctors with partiality and prejudice, this defence may not appear fatisfactory; it has, nevertheless, been judged so by many persons of un-common discernment; and we invite the reader to judge for himfelf.

[b] AYMON, Actes de tous les Synodes Nationaux des Eglises Reformées de France, tom. ii. p. 275, 276.

[[]i] See Aymon, loc. cit. tom. i. p. 400, 401. 457. tom. ii. p. 13. - Bossuet, Histoire des Variations des Eglises Protestantes, B b 2

CENT. XVII. SECT. II.

[ii] It does not appear to me that any one, who looks with an unprejudiced eye, can fee the least connection between the opinion of PISCATOR (which I shall not here either refute or defend), and the Popish doctrine which maintains the merit of good works: for though we are not justified (i. e. pardoned or treated as if we had not offended) in confequence of Christ's active obedience to the Divine Law, yet we may be fo by his death and fufferings; and it is really to thefe, that the fcriptures, in many places, ascribe our acceptance. Now a person who afcribes his acceptance and falvation to the death and mediation of Christ, does not furely give any countenance to the doctrine of the flrict and rigorous merit of works, although he should not be so sharp-sighted as to perceive the influence which certain doctors attribute to, what is called, Christ's active obedience. But let it be observed here, in a particular mnnner, that the opinion of PISCATOR is much more unfavourable to Popery than our author imagined, fince it overturns totally, by a direct and most natural consequence, the popish doctrine concerning works of Supererogation, which is as monstrous an absurdity in morals, as Transubstantiation is in the estimation of common fense. For if Christ, in his universal and perfect obedience to the divine laws, did no more than he was morally obliged were followed by others of a much more weighty CENT. and momentous kind, of which fome were fo er- SECT. II. roneous, that they were highly diffiked and re- PART II. jected, even by those of the French Protestants themselves, who were the most remarkable for their moderation, charity, and love of peace $\lceil k \rceil$.

XIV. The doctors of Saumur revived a con- The controversy, that had for some time been suspended, excited by the Hypothetical

obliged to do by his character as a man, is it not abfurd, if not Universaimpious, to feek in the virtue of the Romish faints (all of lists. whom were very imperfect, and some of them very worthless mortals) an exuberance of obedience, a fuperabundant quantity of virtue, to which they were not obliged, and which they are supposed to deposit in the hands of the Popes, who are empowered to distribute it, for love of money, among such as have need of it to make up their accounts?

[k] This affirmation is groundless, and I wish it were not liable to the charge of malignity. The accusation that Dr. Mosheim brings here against the Reformed churches in France is of too serious a nature not to require the most evident and circumstantial proofs. He has, however, alleged none, nor has he given any one instance of those weighty and momentous concessions that were made to popery. It was not, indeed, in his power either to give arguments or examples of a fatisfactory kind; and it is highly probable, that the unguarded words of ELIAS SAURIN, minister of Utrecht, in relation to the learned Lewis LE BLANC, professor of Sedan (which dropt from the pen of the former, in his Examen de la Théologie de M. Jurieu), are the only testimony Dr. Mosheim had to allege, in support of an accusation, which he has not limited to any one person, but inconsiderately thrown out upon the French churches in general. Those who are desirous of a full illustration of this matter, and yet have not an opportunity of confulting the original fources of information, may fatisfy their curiofity by perusing the articles BEAULIEU and AMY-RAUT, in BAYLE's Dictionary: and the articles PAJON and PAPIN, in M. DE CHAUFFEPIED's Supplement to that work. Any concessions that feem to have been made by the Proteflant doctors in France to their adversaries, confifted in giving an Arminian turn to some of the more rigid tenets of CALVIN, relating to Original Sin, Predestination and Grace; and this turn would, undoubtedly, have been given to these dostrines, had popery been out of the question. But these concessions are not certainly what our historian had in view; nor would he, in effect, have treated such concessions as erroneous.

CENT. NVII. SECT. II. PART II.

by their attempts to reconcile the doctrine of Predestination, as it had been taught at Geneva, and confirmed at Dort, with the fentiments of those who represent the Deity as offering the displays of his goodness and mercy to all mankind. The first person who made this fruitless attempt was JOHN CAMERON, whose fentiments were supported and further illustrated by Moses AMYRAUT, a man of uncommon fagacity and erudition. latter applied himself, from the year 1634, with unparalleled zeal, to this arduous work, and difplayed in it extraordinary exertions of capacity and genius; and so ardently was he bent on bringing it into execution, that he made, for this purpole, no fmall changes in the doctrine commonly received among the Reformed in France. form of doctrine he had ftruck out, in order to accomplish this important reconciliation, may be briefly fummed up in the following propositions: "That God defires the happiness of all men, and "that no mortal is excluded, by any divine decree,

"death, fufferings, and Gospel of Christ;
"That, however, none can be made a par"taker of the blessings of the Gospel, and of "eternal salvation, unless he believe in Jesus

" from the benefits that are procured by the

" CHRIST;

"That fuch indeed is the immense and uni"versal goodness of the Supreme Being, that he "refuses to none the power of believing; though he "does not grant unto all his affistance and suc"cour, that they may wisely improve this power "to the attainment of everlasting salvation;

"And that, in confequence of this, multitudes perifh, through their own fault, and not from

" any want of goodness in God [1]."

Those

^[1] See Jo, Wolfg. Jaegeri Historia Eccles, et Politica, Sacule xvii. Decem, iv. p. 522.

Those who embraced this doctrine were called C E N T. Universalists, because they represented God as will- SECT. II. ing to shew mercy to all mankind; and Hypothe-PART, il. tical Universalifts, because the condition of faith in CHRIST was necessary to render them the objects of this mercy. It is the opinion of many, that this doctrine differs but little from that which was established by the fynod of Dort; but such do not feem to have attentively confidered either the principles from whence it is derived, or the confequences to which it leads. The more I examine this reconciling fystem, the more I am perfuaded, that it is no more than Arminianism or Pelagianism artfully dressed up, and ingeniously covered with a half-transparent veil of specious, but ambiguous expressions; and this judgment is confirmed by the language that is used in treating this subject by the modern followers of AMYRAUT, who express their fentiments with more courage,

This mitigated view of the doctrine of Predestination has only one defect; but it is a capital one. It represents God, as defiring a thing (i. e. falvation and happiness) for ALL, which in order to its attainment requires a degree of his affiftance and fuccour which he refuset to MANY. This rendered grace and redemption univerfal only in words, but partial in reality; and therefore did not at all mend the matter. The Supralaplarians were confiftent with themselves, but their doctrine was harsh and terrible, and was founded on the most unworthy notions of the Supreme Being; and, on the other hand, the fystem of AMYRAUT was full of inconsistencies; nay, even the Sublapfarian doctrine has its difficulties, and rather palliates, than removes the horrors of Supralapfarianism. What then is to be done? from what quarter shall the candid and well-difposed Christian receive that folid satisfaction and wife direction, which neither of these systems is adapted to administer? These he will receive by turning his dazzled and feeble eye from the fecret decrees of God, which were neither defigned to be rules of action nor fources of comfort to mortals here below; and by fixing his view upon the mercy of God, as it is manifested through Christ, the pure laws and sublime promises of his Gospel, and the respectable equity of his prefent government and his future tribunal.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART 11. plainness, and perspicuity, than the spirit of the times permitted their master to do. A cry was raifed, in feveral French fynods, against the doctime of AMYRAUT; but, after it had been carefully examined by them, and defended by him at their public meetings with his ufual eloquence and erudition, he was honourably acquitted [m]. The opposition he met with from Holland was still more formidable, as it came from the learned and celebrated pens of RIVET, SPANHEIM, DES Marets, and other adversaries of note; he nevertheless answered them with great spirit and vigour, and his cause was powerfully supported afterwards by Daille, Blondel, Mestrezat, and CLAUDE [n]. This controversy was carried on. for a long time, with great animofity and little fruit to those who opposed the opinions of the French innovator. For the sentiments of AMY-RAUT were not only received in all the universities of the Hugonots in France, and adopted by divines of the highest note in that nation, but also foread themselves as far as Geneva, and were afterwards diffeminated by the French Protestants, who fled from the rage of perfecution, through all the Reformed churches of Europe. And they now are so generally received, that few have the courage to oppose or decry them.

The contests occafioned by De la Place and Cappel.

XV. The defire of mitigating certain doctrines of the Reformed church, that drew upon it the heaviest censures from both the Roman-catholics and some Protestant communions, was the true origin of the opinion propagated, in the year CENT. 1640, by De La Place, concerning the imputa- XVII. tion of original fin. This divine, who was the PART II. intimate friend of AMYRAUT, and his colleague at Saumur, rejected the opinion generally received in the schools of the Reformed, that the personal and actual transgression of the first man is imputed to bis posterity. He maintained, on the contrary, that God imputes to every man his natural corruption, his perfonal guilt, and his propenfity to fin; or, to fpeak in the theological style, he affirmed, that original fin is indirectly and not directly imputed to mankind. This opinion was condemned as erroneous, in the year 1642, by the fynod of Charenton, and many Dutch and Helvetic doctors of great name fet themselves to refute it [0]; while the love of peace and union prevented its author from defending it in a public and open manner $\lceil p \rceil$. But neither the fentence of the fynod, nor the filence of DE LA PLACE, could hinder this fentiment from making a deep impression on the minds of many, who looked upon it as conformable to the plainest dictates of justice and equity; nor could they prevent its being transmitted, with the French exiles, into other countries.

[n] BAYLE'S Dictionary, vol. i. at the articles AMYRAUT and BLONDEL; and vol. ii. at the article DAILLE.—See CHRIST. PEALILUS, De fermala confenjus, cap. i. p. 4.

[[]m] See Aymon, Actes des Synodes Nationaux des Eglises Reformées en France, tom. ii. p. 571. p. 604.—BLONDEL, Actes Authentiques des Eglises Reformées touchant la paix et la charité fraternelle, p. 19.—82—Edit. of Amsterdam published in 4to, in the year 1655.

In the class of those who, to diminish or avoid the resentment of the papists, made concessions inconsistent with truth, and detrimental to the purity of the Protestant religion, many place JLEWIS CAPPEL, professor at Saumur, who, in a voluminous and elaborate work [a], undertook

[[]e] AYMON, Synodes des Eglises Reformées de France, tom. ii. p. 680.

[[]p] CHRIST. EBERH. WEISMANNI Hiftor. Ecclef. Sæc. xvii. p. 817.

^[4] This work, which is entitled, Arcanum Punctuationis Recollectum, is fill extant, with its Vindicia, in the works of CAPPEL, printed at Amferdam, in the year 1689, in folio, and in the Critica Sacra V. T. published in folio at Paris, 1650.

CENT. XVII. SECT, II. PART II. to prove that the Hebrew points were not used by the facred writers, and were a modern invention added to the text by the Masorethes [r]. It is at least certain, that this hypothesis was highly agreeable to the votaries of Rome, and feemed manifestly adapted to diminish the authority of the holy Scriptures, and to put them upon a level with oral tradition, if not to render their decifions still less respectable and certain [s]. On these accounts, the system of this famous professor was opposed, with the most ardent efforts of erudition and zeal, by feveral doctors both of the Reformed and Lutheran churches, who were eminent for their knowledge of the Hebrew language, and their acquaintance with Oriental learning in general $\lceil t \rceil$.

Lewis le Blanc. XVI. Though these great men gave offence to many, by the freedom and novelty of their sentiments, yet they had the approbation and esteem of the greatest part of the Resonmed churches; and the equity of succeeding generations removed the aspersions that envy had thrown upon them during their lives, and made ample amends for [r] It was also Cappel who affirmed, that the characters, which compose the Hebrew text, were those that the Chaldeans used after the Babylonish captivity, the Jews having always made use of the Samaritan characters before that period.

[t] Sec B. Jo. CHRIST. WOLFII Biblioth. Hebraica, p. ii.

P. 27.

This abfurd notion of the tendency of Cappel's hypothesis is now hissed almost entirely out of the learned world. Be that as it may, the hypothesis in question is by no means peculiar to Cappel; it was adopted by LUTHER, Calvin, the three great pillars of the Reformation; asasib by MUNSTER, OLIVETAN, MASIUS, SCALIER, CASAUDON, DRUSIUS, DE DIEU, WALTON, and BOCHART, those eminent men, who have cast such light on facred philology; so that Cappel had only the merit of importing it by new arguments, and placing it in a striking and luminous point of view.

the injuries they had received from feveral of their CENT. cotemporaries. This was far from being the case SECT. II. of those doctors who either openly attempted to PART II. bring about a complete reconciliation and union between the Reformed and Romish churches, or explained the doctrines of Christianity in & fuch a manner as lessened the difference between the two communions, and thereby rendered the paffage from the former to the latter less disgusting and painful. The attempts of these peace-makers were looked upon as odious, and in the iffue they proved utterly unfuccefsful. The most eminent of these reconciling doctors were Lewis LE BLANC, professor at Sedan, and CLAUDE PAJON, minister of Orleans [u], who were both remarkable for the persuasive power of their eloquence, and discovered an uncommon degree of penetration and fagacity in their writings and negociations. The former passed in review many of the controversies that divide the two churches, and feemed to prove, with the utmost perspicuity, that some of them were merely disputes about words, and that the others were of much less consequence than was generally imagined [w]. This manner of stating the differences between the two churches drew upon LE BLANC the indignation of those,

[u] It is difficult to conceive, what could engage Dr. Mosheim to place Pajon in the class of those who explained the doctrines of Christianity in such a manner, as to diminish the difference between the doctrine of the Reformed and Romish churches. Pajon was, indeed, a moderate divine, and leaned somewhat towards the Arminian system; and this propensity was not uncommon among the French Protestants. But sew doctors of this time wrote with more learning, zeal, and judgment, against popery, than Claude Pajon, as appears from his excellent treatise against Nicole, entitled, Examen du Livre, qui porte pour titre préjugées légitimes contre les Calvinisses.

[w] In his Thefes Theologicæ, which have passed through several editions, and are highly worthy of an attentive perusal. They were twice printed at London.

CENT. who looked upon all attempts to foften and modify controverted doctrines as dangerous and detrimental to the cause of truth [x]. On the other hand, the acuteness and dexterity with which he treated this nice matter, made a confiderable impression upon several persons, and procured him disciples, who still entertain his reconciling sen-timents, but either conceal them entirely, or discover them with caution, as they are known to be displeasing to the greatest part of the members of both communions.

Claude Pajon.

XVII. The modifications under which PAJON exhibited some of the doctrines of the Reformed church, were also extremely offensive and unpopular. This ecclefiaftic applied the principles and tenets of the Cartesian philosophy, of which he was a warm and able defender, in explaining the opinions of that church relating to the corruption of human nature, the state of its moral faculties and powers, the grace of God, and the conversion of sinners; and, in the judgment of many, he gave an erroneous interpretation of these opinions. It is, indeed, very difficult to determine what were the real fentiments of this man; nor is it easy to say, whether this difficulty be most owing to the affected obscurity and ambiguity under which he disguised them, or to the inaccuracy with which his adversaries, through negligence or malignity, have reprefented them. If we may give credit to the latter, his doctrine amounts to the following propositions: " That " the corruption of man is lefs, and his natural " power to amend his ways greater, than is ge-" nerally imagined:-That original fin lies in " the understanding alone, and confists principally

" in the obscurity and imperfection of our ideas

[&]quot; of divine things:-That this imperfection o [x] See BATLE's Distionary, at the article BEAULIEU.

" the human understanding has a pernicious in- CENT. "fluence upon the will, excites in it vicious pro- SECT II.

"penfities, and thus leads it to finful actions:— PART II. That this internal diforder is healed, not by "the mere efforts of our natural faculties and powers, but by the affiftance and energy of the " Holy Spirit, operating upon the mind by the " divine word as its mean or instrument :- That, " however, this word is not endowed with any " divine intrinsic energy, either natural or super-" natural, but only with a moral influence, i. e. "that it corrects and improves the understand-" ing, in the fame manner as human truth does, " even by imparting clear and diffinct notions of " spiritual and divine things, and furnishing so-" lid arguments for the truth and divinity of the "Christian religion, and its perfect conformity " with the dictates of right reason:-And that, " of confequence, every man, if no internal or " external impediments destroy or suspend the " exertion of his natural powers and faculties, " may, by the use of bis own reason, and a careful " and affiduous fludy of the revealed will of God, " be enabled to correct what is amifs in his fenti-"ments, affections, and actions, without any ex-" traordinary affiftance from the Holy Ghoft [y]."

Such is the account of the opinions of Pajon that is given by his adversaries. On the other hand, if we take our ideas of his doctrine from himself, we shall find this account disingenuous and erroneous. Pajon intimates plainly his affent to the doctrines that were confirmed by the synod of Dort, and that are contained in the catechisms and confessions of faith of the Reformed churches; he complains that his doctrine has been ill understood or wilfully perverted; and he obferves, that he did not deny entirely an immediate operation of the Holy Spirit on the minds of those that are really converted to God, but only fuch an immediate operation as was not accompanied with the ministry and efficacy of the divine word: or, to express the matter in other terms, he declared that he could not adopt the fentiments of those who represent that word as no more than an instrument void of intrinsic efficacy, a mere external fign of an immediate operation of the Spirit of God [z]. This last declaration is, however, both obscure and captious. Be that as it may, PAION concludes by observing, that we ought not to difpute about the manner in which the Holy Spirit operates upon the minds of men, but content ourfelves with acknowledging, that he is the true and original Author of all that is good in the affections of our heart, and the actions that proceed from them. Notwithstanding these declarations, the doctrine of this learned and ingenious ecclefiaftic was not only looked upon as heterodox by fome of the most eminent divines of the Reformed church, but was also condemned, in the year 1677, by feveral fynods in France, and, in 1686, by a fynod affembled at Rotterdam.

[[]y] FRED. SPANHEIM, Append. ad Elenchum Controversiar. tom. iii. opp. p. 882.—JURIEU, Traité de la Nature et de la Grace, p. 35.—VAL. ERN. LOSCHERI Exercit. de CLAUD. PAJON11 ejusque secastro. doctrina et fatis. Liss. 1692.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II.

XVIII. This controversy, which seemed to be brought to a conclusion by the death of Pajon, was revived, or rather continued, by Isaac Papin, his nephew, a native of Blois, who, by his writings and travels, was highly instrumental in communicating to England, Holland, and Germany,

the

Papin.

^[2] All these declarations made by Pajon may be seen in a confession of his faith, supposed to have been drawn up by himself, and published by the learned M. DE CHAUFFEPIED, in his Nonveau Distinuire Histor. et Critique, tom. ii. p. 164-in note (c) of the article LE CENE.

the contagion of these unhappy debates. This CENT. ecclesiastic expressed his sentiments without am- XVII. biguity or referve, and propagated every where PART IL the doctrine of his uncle, which, according to his crude and harsh manner of representing it, he reduced to the two following propositions:

"I hat the natural powers and faculties of man " are more than sufficient to lead him to the know" ledge of divine truth:

"That, in order to produce that amendment of the " beart, which is called REGENERATION, nothing " more is requisite than to put the body, if its habit " is bad, into a found state by the power of physic, " and then to set truth and falshood before the UN-" DERSTANDING, and virtue and vice before the " WILL, in their genuine colours, clearly and dif-" tinetly, so as that their nature and properties may " be fully apprehended."

This and the other opinions of PAPIN were refuted, with a confiderable degree of acrimony, in the year 1686, by the famous JURIEU, professor of divinity and pastor of the French church at Rotterdam, and they were condemned the year following by the fynod of Boisleduc. In the year 1688, they were condemned, with still greater marks of feverity, by the French fynod at the Hague, where a fentence of excommunication was pronounced against their author. Exasperated at these proceedings, PAPIN returned into France in the year 1690, where he abjured publicly the Protestant religion, and embraced the communion of the church of Rome, in which he died in the year 1709 [a]. It has been affirmed by fome, that this ingenious man was treated with great rigour and injustice; and that his theological opinions were unfaithfully represented by his violent

[[]a] See Jurieu, De la Nature et de la Grace,-Molleri Cimbria Literat. tom. ii. p. 608.

CENT. and unrelenting adversary, JURIEU, whose warmth XVII. and impetuofity in religious controversy are well PART II. known. How far this affirmation may be supported by evidence, we cannot pretend to determine. A doctrine, fomething like that of PAJON, was maintained in feveral treatifes, in the year 1684, by CHARLES LE CENE, a French divine of uncommon learning and fagacity, who gave a new and very fingular translation of the Bible [b]. But he entirely rejected the doctrine of Original Sin, and of the importance of human nature; and afferted, that it was in every man's power to amend his ways, and arrive at a state of obedience and virtue, by the mere use of his natural faculties, and an attentive study of the divine word; more especially, if these were seconded by the advantage of a good education, and the influence of virtuous examples. Hence feveral divines pretend that his doctrine is, in many respects, different from that of PAJON [c].

Le Cene.

The state of the church ct England under James I.

XIX. The church of England had, for a long time, refembled a ship tossed on a boisterous and tempestuous ocean. The opposition of the Papists on the one hand, and the discontents and remonstrances of the Puritans on the other, had kept it in a perpetual ferment. When, on the death of ELIZABETH, JAMES I. ascended the throne, these latter conceived the warmest hopes of feeing more ferene and prosperous days, and of being delivered from the vexations and oppressions they were constantly exposed to, on account of their attachment to the discipline and worship of the church of Geneva. These hopes were fo much the more natural, as the king had received

[c] See the learned and laborious M. CHAUFFEPIED's Nouv. Distion. Hift. et Critiq. tom. ii. p. 160. at the article LE CENE.

[[]b] This translation was published at Amsterdam in the year 1741, and was condemned by the French (ynod in Holland.

received his education in Scotland, where the Pu-ritans prevailed, and had, on fome occasions, made the strongest declarations of his attachment to their ecclesiastical constitution [d]. And some of the first steps taken by this prince seemed to encourage these hopes, as he appeared desirous of assuming the character and office of an arbitrator, in order to accommodate matters between the church and the Puritans [e]. But these expectations soon vanished, and, under the government of James, things put on a new face. As the desire of unlimited power and authority was the reigning

[d] In a General Assembly held at Edinburgh, in the year 1590, this prince is said to have made the following public declaration: "I praise God that I was born in the time of the "light of the Gospel, and in such a place as to be the king of the sincerest (i. e. purest) kirk in the world. The kirk of Geneva keep pasche and yule (i. e. Easter and Christmas). "What have they for them? They have no institution. As for our neighbour kirk of England, their service is an evil—said mass in English; they want nothing of the mass but the liftings (i. e. the elevation of the hoss). I charge you, my good ministers, doctors, elders, nobles, gentlemen, and barrons, to stand to your purity, and to exhort your people to do the same; and I forsooth, as long as I brook my life, shall do the same." Calderwood's History of the Church of Scotland, p. 256.

F [e] The religious disputes between the church and the Puritans induced JAMES to appoint a conference between the two parties at Hampton-Court; at which nine bishops, and as many dignitaries of the church, appeared on the one fide, and four puritan ministers on the other. The king himself took a confiderable part in the controverfy against the latter: and this was an occupation well adapted to his tafte; for nothing could be more pleasing to this royal pedant, than to dictate magisterially to an assembly of divines concerning points of faith and discipline, and to receive the applauses of these holy men for his superior zeal and learning. The conference continued three days. The first day it was held between the king and the bishops and deans, to whom JAMES proposed some objections against certain expressions in the liturgy, and a few alterations in the ritual of the church; in consequence of which, fome flight alterations were made. The two following days VJL. V.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II. ing paffion in the heart of this monarch, fo all his measures, whether of a civil or religious nature, were calculated to answer the purposes of his ambition. The Presbyterian form of ecclefiastical government feemed lefs favourable to his views than the episcopal bierarchy; as the former exhibits a kind of republic, which is administered by various rulers of equal authority; while the latter approaches much nearer to the spirit and genius of monarchy. The very name of a republic, synod, or council, was odious to JAMES, who dreaded every thing that had a popular aspect; hence he diftinguished the bishops with peculiar marks of his favour, extended their authority, increased their prerogatives, and publicly adopted and inculcated the following maxim, No bishop, no king. At the fame time, as the church of England had not vet abandoned the Calvinistical doctrines of Predestination and Grace, he also adhered to them for fome time, and gave his theological reprefentatives, in the fynod of Dort, an order to join in the condemnation of the fentiments of Arminius, in relation to these deep and intricate points.

the Puritans were admitted, whose proposals and remonstrances may be feen in NEAL's History of the Puritans, vol. ii. p. 15. Dr. WARNER, in his Exclosingle at Highery of England, observes, that this author must be read with caution, on account of his unfairness and partiality; why therefore did he not take his account of the Rampton-Court conference from a better fource? The different accounts of the opposite parties, and more particularly those published by Dr. EARLOW, dean of Chefter, on the one hand, and PATRICK GALLOWAY, a Scots writer, on the other, (both of whom were present at the conference), must be carefully consulted, in order to our forming a proper idea of these theological transactions. JAMES at least obtained, on this occasion, the applause he had in view. The Archbishop of Canterbury (WHITGIFT) faid, That undoubtedly his majesty froke by the frecial affifiance of God's spirit; and BAN-CROFT, falling on his knees, with his eyes raifed to-JAMES, expressed himself thus: I protest my heart melieth for joy, that Almighty God, of his fingular mercy, has given us fuch a king, as fince Chrift's time has not been.

Abbot, archbishop of Carterbury, a man of re- CENT. markable gravity [f], and eminent zeal both for $\frac{XVII}{SECT.II}$, civil and religious liberty, whose lenity towards $\frac{YAT}{FAST}$ II.

[f] Lord CLARENDON fays, in his History of the Rebellion, that "ABBOT was a man of very morose manners, " and of a very fowre aspect, which at that time was called " Gravity." If, in general, we firike a medium between what CLARENDON and NEAL fay of this prelate, we shall probably arrive at the true knowledge of his character. See the History of the Rebellion, vol. i. p. 88. and NEAL's History of the Puritans, vol. ii. p. 243. It is cer Ain, that nothing can be more unjust and partial than Charendon's account of this eminent prelate, particularly when he fays, that be neither underflood nor regarded the conflitution of the church. But it is too much the custom of this writer, and others of his stamp, to give the denomination of latitudinarian indifference to that charity, prudence, and moderation, by which alone the best interests of the church (though not the personal views of many of its ambitious members) can be established upon firm and permanent foundations. ABBOT would have been reckoned a good churchman by fome, if he had breathed that spirit of despotism and violence, which, being effentially incompatible with the spirit and character of a people not only free, but jealous of their liberty, has often endangered the church, by exciting that refentment which always renders opposition excessive. Abbor was so far from being indifferent about the constitution of the church, or inclined to the Presbyterian discipline (as this noble author affirms in his History of the Rebellien), that it was by his zeal and dexterity that the clergy of Scotland, who had refused to admit the Bishops as moderators in their church-synods, were brought to a more tractable temper, and things put into fuch a fituation as afterwards produced the entire establishment of the episcopal order in that nation. It is true, that Abbot's zeal in this affair was conducted with great prudence and moderation, and it was by these that his zeal was rendered fuccessful. Nor have these his transactions in Scotland, where he went as chaplain to the Lord High Treasurer DUNBAR, been fufficiently attended to by historians; nay, they feem to have been entirely unknown to fome, who have pretended to depreciate the conduct and principles of this virtuous and excellent prelate. King James, who had been so zealous a Preflyterian in appearance before his accession to the Crown of England, had scarcely set his foot out of Scotland, when he conceived the defign of refloring the ancient form of epifcopal government in that kingdom; and it was Abbot's transactions there that brought him to that high favour with Cc 2

XVII. SECT. II. PART II.

CENT. their ancestors the Puritans still celebrate in the highest strains [g], used his utmost endeavours

> the king, which, in the space of little more than three years, raifed him from the deanry of Winchester to the see of Canterbury. For it was by ABBOT's mild and prudent counfels, that DUNBAR procured that famous act of the General Affembly of Scotland, by which it was provided, "that the King " should have the calling of all general assemblies-that the " bishops (or their deputies) should be perpetual moderators " of the Diocefian fynods-that no excommunication should " be pronounced without their approbation—that all prefence tations of benefices should be made by them-that the de-" privation or suspension of ministers should belong to them-"that the visitation of the diocese should be performed by "the bishop or his deputy only-and that the bishop should " be moderator of all conventions for exercifings or prophe-" fyings (i. e. preaching) within their bounds." See CAL-DERWOOD's True History of the Church of Scotland, fol. 1680. 588, 589. HEYLIN's Hiftory of the Preflyterians, p. 381, 382. and, above all, Speed's Hiliory of Great Britain, Book x. fol. 1227. The writers who feem the least disposed to speak favourably of this wife and good prelate bear testimony, neverthelefs, to his eminent piety, his exemplary converfation, and his inflexible probity and integrity: and it may be faid with truth, that, if his moderate measures had been pursued, the liberties of England would have been secured, Popery discountenanced, and the church prevented from running into those exceffes which afterwards proved fo fatal to it. If ABBOT's candour failed him on any occasion, it was in the representations, which his rigid attachment, not to the discipline, but to the dostrinal tenets of Calvinism, led him to give of the Arminian doctors. There is a remarkable inflance of this in a letter of his to Sir RALPH WINWOOD, dated at Lambeth the 1st of June 1613, and occasioned by the arrival of GROTIUS in England, who had been expressly fent from Holland, by the Remonstrants or Arminians, to mitigate the king's displeasure and antipathy against that party. In this letter, the archbishop represents GROTIUS (with whom he certainly was not worthy to be named, either in point of learning, fagacity, or judgment) as a Pedant; and mentions, with a high degree of complacence and approbation, the abfurd and impertinent judgment of some civilians and divines, who called this immortal ornament of the republic of letters, a fmatterer and a simple fellow. See WINwoon's M.morials, vol. iii. p. 459.

[g] See Anton. Wood, Athena Oxonienf. tom. i. p. 583 .-NEAL's History of the Puritans, vol. ii. ch. iv. p. 242.-CLA-

RENDON'S Hiftory of the Rebellion, vol. i.

to confirm the king in the principles of Calvinism, CENT. to which he himself was thoroughly attached. XVII. But scarcely had the British divines returned from PART II. the fynod of Dort, and given an account of the laws that had been enacted, and the doctrines that had been established by that famous assembly, than the king, together with the greatest part of the episcopal clergy, discovered, in the strongest terms, their diflike of these proceedings, and judged the fentiments of Arminius, relating to the divine decrees, preferable to those of GOMA-RUS and CALVIN [b]. This fudden and unexpected

[b] See HEYLIN's History of the Five Articles .- NEAL, ibid. vol. ii. ch. ii. p. 117. This latter author tells us, that the following verses were made in England, with a defign to pour contempt on the fynod of Durt, and to turn its proceedings into ridicule:

Dordrechti Synodus, Nodus; Chorus Integer, Æger; Conventus, Ventus: Seffio, Stramen. Amen *!

With respect to James, those who are desirous of forming a just idea of the character, proceedings, and theological fickleness and inconftancy of that monarch, must peruse the writers of English history, more especially LARREY and RAPIN THOY-RAS. The greatest part of these writers tell us, that, towards the latter end of his days, JAMES, after having deferted from the Calvinists to the Arminians, began to discover a fingular propenfity towards Popery; and they affirm positively, that he entertained the most ardent desire of bringing about a union between the church of England and the church of Rome. In this, however, these writers seem to have gone too far; for though many of the proceedings of this injudicious prince deferve justly the sharpest censure, yet it is both rash and unjust to accuse him of a design to introduce Popery into England.

F * It would be a difficult, nay, an unfurmountable task, to justify all the proceedings of the synod of Dort; and it were much to be wished, that they had been more conformable to the spirit of Christian charity, than the representations of history, impartially weighed, shew them to have been. We are not, however, to conclude, from the infipid monkish lines here quoted by Dr. Mosheim, that the transactions and decisions of that fynod were universally condemned or despised in England. It had its partisans in the established church, as well as among the Puritans; and its decisions, in point of doctrine, were looked upon by many, and not without reason, as agreeable to the tenour of the Book of Articles established by law in the Church of England.

Cc3

It

CENT. XVII. Sect. II. Part II. pected change in the theological opinions of the court and clergy, was certainly owing to a variety of reasons, as will appear evident to those who have any acquaintance with the spirit and transactions of these times. The principal one, if we are not decemed, must be fought in the plans of a further reformation of the church of England, that were proposed by several eminent ecclesiastics, whose intention was to bring it to as near a referriblance as was possible of the primitive church. And every one knows, that the peculiar doctrines to which the victory was affigned by the synod of Dort, were absolutely unknown in the first ages of the Christian church [i]. Be

It is not to be believed, that a prince, who aspired after arbitrary power and uncontrouted dominion, could ever have entertained a thought of submitting to the yoke of the Roman pontif +. The truth of the matter feems to be this, that, towards the latter end of his reign, James began to have less aversion to the dostrines and rites of the Romish church, and permitted certain religious observances, that were conformable to the spirit of that church, to be used in England. This conduct was founded upon a manner of reasoning, which he had learned from feveral bishops of his time, (viz.). That the primitive church is the model which all Christian churches ought to imitate in doctrine and worthip; that, in proportion as any church approaches to this primitive flandard of truth and purity, it must become proportionably pure and perfect; and that the Romish church retained more of the spirit and manner of the primitive church than the Puritan or Calvinist churches. Of these three propositions, the two first are undoubtedly true, and the lan is evidently and demonstrably false. Resides, this makes nothing to the argument; for as JAMES had a manifest aversion to the Puritans, it could, in his eyes, be no very great recommendation of the Romish church, that it surpassed that of the Puritans in doctrine and discipline.

[i] Dr. Moshelm has annexed the following note to this passage: "Perhaps the king entered into these ecclesiastical proceedings with the more readiness, when he reflected on the civil commotions and tumulis that an attachment to the Presysterias religion had occasioned in Scotland. There that as it may, this change was fatal to the inte- CENT. rests of the Puritans; for, the king being indisposed to the opinions and institutions of Calvinism, the Puritans were left without defence, and exposed anew to the animofity and hatred of their adverfaries, which had been, for fome time, fuspended; but now broke out with redoubled vehemence, and at length kindled a religious war, whose confequences were deplorable beyond expression. In the year 1625, died James I., the bitterest enemy of the doctrine and discipline of the Puritans, to which he had been in his youth most warmly attached; the most inflexible and ardent patron of the Arminians, in whose ruin and condemnation in Holland he had been fingularly inftrumental; and the most zealous defender of episcopal go-

[†] This remark is confuted by fact, observation, and the perpetual contradictions that are observable in the conduct of men; besides, see the note [i].

SECT. II.

PART II.

" are also some circumstances that intimate plainly enough, "that JAMES, before his accession to the crown of England, "was very far from having an aversion to Popery." Thus far the note of our author, and whoever looks into the Historical View of the Negociations between the Courts of England, France, and Brussels, from the year 1592 to 1617, extracted from the MSS. State Papers of Sir Thomas Edmondes and ANTHONY BACON, Efq; and published in the year 1749, by the learned and judicious Dr. BIRCH, will be perfuaded, that, towards the year 1595, this fickle and unfleady prioce had really formed a defign to embrace the faith of Rome. See, in the curious collection now mentioned, the Postferist of a letter from Sir THOMAS EDMONDES to the Lord High Treafurer, dated the 20th of December 1595. We learn also, from the Memoirs of Sir RALPH WINWOOD, that, in the year 1596, JAMES fent Mr. OGILBY, a Scots baron, into Spain, to affure his Catholic Majesty, that he was then ready and resolved to embrace Popery, and to propose an alliance with that king and the Pope against the Queen of England. See State Tracts, vol. i. p. i. See also an extract of a letter from Tobie MATTHEW, D. D. dean of Durham, to the Lord Treasurer BURLEIGH, containing an information of Scotch affairs, in STRYPE'S Annals, vol. iv. p. 201. Above all, fee HARRIS'S Historical and Critical Account of the Life and Writings of JAMES I., p. 29. note (N). This last writer may be added to LARREY and RAPIN, who have exposed the pliability and inconfistency of this felf-sufficient monarch.

XVII. SECT. II. PART II.

CENT. vernment, against which he had more than once expressed himself in the strongest terms. He left the conftitution of England, both ecclefiastical and civil, in a very unfettled and fluctuating state, languishing under intestine disorders of various kinds.

The flate of the church of England under Charles I.

XX. His fon and fucceffor Charles I., who had imbibed his political and religious principles. had nothing fo much at heart as to bring to perfection what his father had left unfinished. All the exertions of his zeal, and the whole tenour of his administration, were directed towards the three following objects: " The extending the " royal prerogative and raising the power of the " crown above the authority of the law-the re-" duction of all the churches in Great Britain and " Ireland under the jurisdiction of bishops, whose " government he looked upon as of divine infti-"tution, and also as the most adapted to guard "the privileges and majefty of the throne—and, " laftly, the suppression of the opinions and infti-"tutions that were peculiar to Calvinism, and the modelling of the doctrine, discipline, ce-" remonies, and policy of the church of England, " after the spirit and constitution of the primi-"tive church." The person whom the king chiefly intrusted with the execution of this arduous plan, was WILLIAM LAUD, bishop of London, who was afterwards raised, in the year 1633, to the fee of Canterbury, and exhibited, in these high flations, a mixed character, composed of great qualities and great defects. The voice of justice must celebrate his erudition, his fortitude, his ingenuity, his zeal for the sciences, and his munificence and liberality to men of letters; and, at the same time, even charity must acknowledge with regret, his inexcufable imprudence, his exceffive fuperstition, his rigid attachment to the fentiments, rites, and institutions of the ancient church, church, which made him behold the Puritans CENT. and Calvinists with horror [k]; and that violent spirit of animosity and persecution, that discovered itself in the whole course of his ecclesiastical administration [1]. This haughty prelate executed the plans of his royal mafter, and fulfilled the views of his own ambition, without using those mild and moderate methods, that prudence employs to make unpopular schemes go down. He carried things with a high hand; when he found the laws opposing his views, he treated them with contempt, and violated them without hesitation; he loaded the Puritans with injuries and vexations, and aimed at nothing less than their total extinction; he rejected the Calviniftical doctrine of Predestination publicly in the year 1625; and, notwithstanding the opposition and remonstrances of Abbot, substituted the Arminian system in its place [m]; he revived many religious rites and ceremonies,

XVII. SECT. II.

[k] See ANT. WOOD, Athena Oxonienf. tom. ii. p. 55.— HEYLIN's Cyprianus, or the History of the Life and Death of WILLIAM LAUD, published at London in 1668 .- CLAREN-DON's Hiftory, vol. i.

[1] "Sincere he undoubtedly was (fays Mr. HUME), and, " however mifguided, actuated by religious principles in all his " pursuits; and it is to be regretted, that a man of such spirit, "who conducted his enterprizes with fuch warmth and industry, " had not entertained more enlarged views, and embraced prin-" ciples more favourable to the general happiness of human so-" ciety."

[m] See Mich. LE Vassor, Hift. de Louis XIII. tom. v.

This expression may lead the uninformed reader into a mistake, and make him imagine that LAUD had caused the Calvinifical doctrine of the xxxix Articles to be abrogated, and the tenets of ARMINIUS to be substituted in their place. It may therefore be proper to fet this matter in a clearer light. In the year 1625, LAUD wrote a small treatise to prove the orthodoxy of the Arminian doctrines; and, by his credit with the duke of Buckingham, had Arminian and Anti-puritanical chaplains placed about the king. This step increased the debates between the Calvinistical and Arminian doctors, and produced C E N T. ceremonies, which, though flamped with the XVII.
SECT. II. fanction of antiquity, were nevertheless marked PART II.

With

produced the warmest animosities and dissensions. To calm thefe, the king iffued out a proclamation, dated the 14th of January 1626, the literal tenor of which was, in truth, more favourable to the Calvinias than to the Arminians, though, by the manner in which it was interpreted and executed by LAUD. it was turned to the advantage of the latter. In this proclamation it was faid expressly, "that his majetly would admit of no " innovations in the destrine, discipline, or government of the " church;" (N. B. The dostrine of the church previously to this, was Calvinifical,) " and therefore charges all his fub-" jects, and especially the clergy, not to publish or main-" tain in preaching or writing, any new inventions or opinions, " contrary to the faid doctrine and discipline established by " law, &c." It was certainly a very fingular inflance of LAUD's indecent partiality, that this proclamation was employed to suppress the books that were expressly written in the defence of the xxxix Articles, while the writings of the Arminians, who certainly opposed these articles, were publicly licenfed. I don't here enter into the merits of the cause; I only speak of the tenor of the Proclamation, and the manner of its execution.

This manner of proceeding shewed how difficult and arduous a thing it is to change fystems of doctrine established by law, fince neither CHARLES, who was by no means diffident of his authority, nor LAUD, who was far from being timorous in the use and abuse of it, attempted to reform articles of faith. that flood in direct opposition to the Arminian doctrines, which they were now promoting by the warmest encouragements, and which were daily gaining ground under their protection. Instead of reforming the xxxix Articles, which step would have met with great opposition from the house of commons, and from a confiderable part of the clergy and laity, who were ftill warmly attached to Calvinifin, LAUD advited the king to have these articles reprinted, with an ambiguous declaration prefixed to them, which might tend to filence or discourage the reigning controversies between the Calvinists and Arminians, and thus fecure to the latter an unmolested state, in which they would daily find their power growing under the countenance and protection of the court. This declaration, which, in most editions of the Common-Prayer, is still to be found at the head of the articles, is a most curious piece of political theology; and had it not borne hard upon the right of private judgment, and been evidently defigued to favour one party, though it carried the aspect of a perfect neutrality, it might have been with the turpitude of superfition, and had been CENT. justly abrogated on that account; he forced bi-

Thops Part II.

looked upon as a wife and provident measure to secure the tranquillity of the church. For, in the tener of this declaration, precision was facrificed to prudence and ambiguity, nay, even contradictions were preferred before confident, clear, and positive decisions, that might have someuted distensions and discord. The declaration seemed to favour the Calvinists, fince it prohibited the affixing any now sonfe to any article; it also favoured in effect the Arminians, as it ordered all curious starch about the contested points to be laid aside, and these disputes to be shut up in God's promises, as they are generally set forth to us in holy scriptures, and the general meaning of the articles of the church of England according to them. But what was fingularly prepofterous in this Declaration was, its being defigned to favour the Arminians, and yet prohibiting expressly any person, either in their sermons or writings, to sut his own single or comment to be the meaning of the article, and ordering them, on the contrary, to take each article in its literal and grammarical sense, and to submit to it in the full and plain meaning thereof; for certainly if the 17th article has a plain, literal, and grammatical meaning, it is a meaning unfavourable to Arminianism; and bishop Burner was obliged afterwards to acknowledge, that without enlarging the fence of the articles, the Arminians could not subscribe them confidently with their opinions, nor without violating the demands of common ingenuity. See Burner's remarks on the examination of his exposition, &c. p. 3. This renders it probable, that the declaration now mentioned

(in which we fee no royal fignature, no attestation of any officer of the crown, no date, in fhort no mark to fhew where. when, or by what authority it was iffued out) was not composed in the reign of king CHARLES. Bishop BURNET, indeed, was of opinion, that it was composed in that reign to support the Arminians, who, when they were charged with departing from the true fenie of the articles, answered, " that they took the articles in their literal and grammatical " sense, and therefore did not prevaricate." But this reasoning does not appear conclusive to the acute and learned author of the Confessional. He thinks it more probable, that the declaration was composed, and first published, in the latter part of king James's reign; for though, fays he, there be no evidence that JAMES ever turned Arminian in principle, yet that was the party that fluck to him in his measures, and worch it became necessary for him on that account to humour, and to render respectable in the eyes of the people by every expedient

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II. fhops upon the Scots nation, which were zealoufly attached to the discipline and ecclesiastical polity of Geneva, and had shewn, on all occasions, the greatest reluctance against an episcopal government; and, lastly, he gave many and very plain intimations, that he looked upon the Romish church, with all its errors, as more pure, more holy, and preferable upon the whole, to those Protestant churches that were not subject to the jurisdiction of bishops. By these his unpopular fentiments and violent measures, LAUD drew an odium on the king, on himfelf, and on the epifcopal order in general. Hence, in the year 1644, he was brought before the public tribunals of justice, declared guilty of high treason, and condemned to lose his head on a feaffold; which fentence was accordingly executed.

After the death of Laud, the diffensions that had reigned for a long time between the king and parliament, grew still more violent, and arose at length to so great a height, that they could not be extinguished but by the blood of that excellent prince. The great council of the nation, heated by the violent suggestions of the Puritans and Independents [n], abolished episcopal government; condemned and abrogated every thing in the ecclesiastical establishment that was contrary to the doctrine, worship, and discipline of the church of Geneva; turned the vehemence of their

[n] The origin of this feet has been already mentioned.

that might not bring any reflexion on his own confiftency. "And "whoever, continues this author, confiders the quibbling and "equivocal terms in which this inftrument is drawn, will, I am perfuaded, observe the distress of a man divided between his "principles and his interests, that is, of a man exactly in the fitua-"tion of king James I., in the three last years of his reign." It is likely then, that this declaration was only republished at the head of the articles, which were reprinted by the order of Charles I.

opposition against the king himself, and having CENT. brought him into their power by the fate of arms, SECT. II. accused him of treason against the majesty of the PART II. nation; and, in the year 1648, while the eyes of Europe were fixed with astonishment on this strange spectacle, caused his head to be struck off on a public scaffold. Such are the calamities that flow from religious zeal without knowledge, from that enthusiasm and bigotry that inspire a blind and immoderate attachment to the external unessential parts of religion, and to certain doctrines illunderstood! These broils and tumults served also unhappily to confirm the truth of an observation often made, that all religious fects, while they are kept under and oppressed, are remarkable for inculcating the duties of moderation, forbearance, and charity towards those who diffent from them; but, as foon as the scenes of persecution are removed, and they, in their turn, arrive at power and pre-eminence, they forget their own precepts and maxims, and leave both the recommendation and practice of charity to those that groan under their yoke. Such, in reality, was the conduct and behaviour of the Puritans during their transitory exaltation; they shewed as little clemency and equity to the bishops and other patrons of epifcopacy, as they had received from them when the reins of government were in their hands [o].

XXI. The Independents, who have been just The Indementioned among the promoters of civil discord pendents. in England, are generally represented by the British writers in a much worse light than the Presbyterians or Calvinists. They are commonly accufed of various enormities, and are even charged

^[0] Besides CLARENDON and the other writers of English history already mentioned, see NEAL's History of the Puritans, vol. ii. and iii.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART !1. with the crime of parricide, as having borne a principal part in the death of the king. whoever will be at the pains of examining, with impartiality and attention, the writings of that feet and their confession of faith, must soon perceive, that many crimes have been imputed to them without foundation, and will probably be induced to think, that the bold attempts of the civil Independents (i. e. of those warm republicans who were the declared enemies of monarchy, and wanted to extend the liberty of the people beyond all bounds of wifdom and prudence) have been unjustly laid to the charge of those Independents, whose principles were merely of a religious kind [p]. The religious Independents derive their

[p] The fect of the Ludependents is of recent date, and still fubfills in England; there is, nevertheless, not one, either of the ancient or modern feets of Christians, that is lefs known. or has been more loaded with groundless aspersions and reproaches. The most eminent English writers, not only among the patrons of episcopacy, but even among those very Presbiterians with whom they are now united, have thrown out against them the bitterest acculations and the severest invectives that the warmest indignation could invent. They have not only been reprefered as definious, mad, fanatical, illiterate, factions, and ignorant both of natural and revealed religion, but also as abandoned to all kinds of wickedness and sedition, and as the only authors of the odious parricide committed on the person of CHARLES I. ". And as the authors who have given these representations, are confidered by foreigners as the best and most authentic relaters of the transactions that have raffed in their own country, and are therefore followed as the furest guides, the Independents appear, almost every where, under the most unfavourable aspect. It must indeed be candidly acknowledged, that as every class and order of men confids of perfore of very different characters and qualities, fo their denomination from the following prin- CENT. ciple, which they held in common with Brownists, PART II.

^{*} Durite (whom nevertheless Liwis on Moulin, the most zealous defender of the Independents, commends in account of his injensity and candous) in his Independent, commends in account of his injensity and candous) in his Independent in the Latter factors slimit Tray adments actus Jurini, quot Indicaram offe foliest joint man fee Indivendent into finite. Adment non acute magis grammers, describe the social Notes: Royal wind a Preflyterianu interentum, Carolina dilada ab inacqualitation interferen.

the SECT. II.

also the sect of Independents has been dishonoured by several turbulent, factious, profligate, and flagitious members. But. if it is a constant maxim with the wife and prudent, not to judge of the spirit and principles of a feet from the actions or expressions of a handful of its members, but from the manners, customs, opinions, and behaviour of the generality of those who compose it, from the writings and discourses of its learned men, and from its public and avowed forms of doctrine and confessions of faith; then, I make no doubt but that, by this rule of estimating matters, the Independents will appear to have been unjustly loaded with fo many accusations and reproaches.

We shall take no notice of the invidious and severe animadversions that have been made upon this religious Community by Clarendon, Echard, Parker, and fo many other writers. To let this whole matter in the clearest and most impartial light, we shall confine ourselves to the account of the Independents given by a writer, judly colebrated by the English themselves, and who, though a foreigner, is generally fupposed to have had an accurate knowledge of the British nation, its history, its parties, its feets, and revolutions. This writer is RAPIN THOYRAS, (who in the twenty-first book of his History of England, vol. ii. p. 514. edit. folio) represents the Independents under such borrid colours, that, were his portrait just, they would not deserve to enjoy the light of the fun, or to breathe the free air of Britain, much less to be treated with indulgence and citeem by those who have the cause of virtue at heart. Let us now examine the account, which this illustrious historian gives of this fest. He declares, in the first place, that, notwithstanding all the pains he had taken to trace out the true origin of it, his inquiries had been entirely fruitless; his words are, as translated by Mr. TINDAL, After all my pains, I have not been able to discover, precisely, the first rife of the Independent just, or fastion. It is very surprising to hear a man of learning, who had employed seventeen years in composing the Hittory of England, and had admittance to so many rich and famous libraries, express his ignorance of a matter, about which it was so easy to acquire ample information. Had he only looked into the work of the learned Horn-BECK, entitled, Summa Controt or Jarum, lib. x. p. 775. he would have found, in a moment, what he had been to long and to laboriously feeking in vain. RAPIN proceeds to the doctrines and opinions of the Independents, and begins here, by a general declaration of their tendency to throw the nation into

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II.

Brownists, that every Christian congregation ought to be governed by its own laws, without depending disorder and combustion; his words are, Thus much is certain, their principles were very proper to put the kingdom in a flame; and this they did effectually. What truth there is in this affertion, will be feen by what follows. Their fentiments concerning government were, if we are to believe this writer, of the most pernicious kind; fince, according to him, they wanted to overturn the monarchy, and to establish a democracy in its place; his words are, With regard to the state, they abborred menarchy, and approved only a republican government. I will not pretend to deny, that there were among the Independents several persons, that were no friends to a kingly government; perfons of this kind were to be found among the Presbyterians, Anabaptists, and all the other religious sects and communities that flourished in England during this tumultuous period; but I want to fee it proved, in an evident and fatisfactory manner, that these republican principles were embraced by all the Independents, and formed one of the diffinguishing characteristics of that fect. There is, at least, no such thing to be found in their public writings. They declared, on the contrary, in a public memorial drawn up by them in the year 1647, that, as magifiracy in general is the ordinance of God, they do not disapprove of any form of civil government, but do freely acknowledge, that a kingly government, bounded by just and wholesome laws, is both allowed by God, and also a good accommodation unto men. I omit the mention of several other circumstances, which unite to prove that the Independents were far from looking with abhorrence on a monarchical government.

Their fentiments of religion, according to RAPIN's account, were high abfurd, fince he reprefents their principles as entirely opposite to those of all other religious communities: As to religion, fays he, their principles were contrary to those of all the rest of the world. With respect to this accusation, it may be proper to opferve, that there are extant two Confessions of Faith, one of the English Independents in Holland, and another drawn up by the principal members of that community in England. The former was composed by John Robinson, the founder of the feel, and was published at Leyden in 4to, in the year 1619, under the following title: Apologia pro exulibus Anglis, qui Brownifter vulgo appellantur; the latter appeared at London, for the first time, in the year 1658, and was thus entitled: A Declaration of the Faith and Order owned and practifed in the Congregational Churches in England, agreed upon, and confented unto, by the Elders and Messengers, in their meeting at

the

depending on the jurifdiction of bishops, or be- CENT. XVII.

ing subject to the authority of synods, presby- SECT. II. teries, PART II.

the Savoy, O. Sober 12, 1658. HORNBECK gave, in the year 1659, a Latin translation of this Declaration, and subjoined it to his Epistolæ ad DURÆUM de Independentismo. It appears evidently from these two public and authentic pieces, not to mention other writings of the Independents, that they differed from the Prefbyterians or Calvinists in no fingle point of any confequence, except that of ecclefiaffical government. put this matter beyond all doubt, we have only to attend to the following paffage in ROBINSON's Apology for the English Exiles, p. 7. 11. where that founder of the fect of the Independents expresses his own private sentiments, and those of his community, in the plainest manner: Profitemur coram Deo et hominibus, adeo nobis convenire cum Ecclesiis Reformatis, Belgicis in re religionis, ut omnibus et firgulis earundem Ecclefiarum fidei articulis, prout babentur in Harmonia confessionum fidei, parati simus subscribere.—Ecclesias Reformatis pro veris et genuinis habemus, cum iissuem in sucris Dei communionem prositemur, et, quantum in nobis est, colimus. It appears evident from this declaration, that, intead of differing totally from all other Christian focieties, it may rather be faid of the Independents, that they were perfectly agreed with by far the greatest part of the Reformed churches. To flicw, as he imagines, by a flriking example, the abfurdity of their religion and worship, our eminent historian tell us, that they not only reject all kind of ecclefiaftical government, but morever allow all their members promifcuoufly, and without exception, to perform in public the pastoral functions, i.e. to preach, pray, and expound the Scriptures; his words are, They were not only averse to episcopacy and the ecclesiastical hierarchy (this charge is true, but it may equally be brought against the Presbyterians, Brownists, Anabaptills, and all the various fects of Non-conformifts), but they would not so much as endure ordinary ministers in the church. They maintained, that every man might pray in public, exhort his brethren, and interpret the Scriptures according to the talents God had endowed him with .- So with them every one preached, prayed, admonished, interpreted the boly Scriptures, without any other call than what he himself drew from hie zeal and supposed gifts, and without any other authority than the approbation of his auditors. This whole charge is evidently false and groundless. The Independents have, and always have had, fixed and regular ministers, approved of by their people; nor do they allow to teach in public every person, who thinks himself qualified for that important office. The celebrated historian has here confounded the Independents with the Brownists, who, as is well VOL. V. D d known,

CENT. teries, or any ecclesiastical assembly composed of XVII.
SECT. II. the deputies from different churches [q]. It is in known, permitted all to pray and preach in public without diffinction. We shall not enlarge upon the other mistakes he has fallen into on this subject; but only observe, that if so eminent a writer, and one so well acquainted with the English nation, has pronounced such an unjust sentence against this sect, we may the more easily excuse an inferior set of authors, who have loaded them with groundless accusations.

It will however be alleged, that, whatever may have been the religious fentiments and discipline of the Independents, innumerable testimonies concur in proving, that they were chargeable with the death of CHARLES I.; and many will confider this fingle circumstance as a sufficient demonstration of the impiety and depravity of the whole fect. I am well aware, indeed, that many of the most eminent and respectable English writers have given the Independents the denomination of Regicides; and, if by the term Independents they mean those licentious republicans, whose dislike of a monarchical form of government carried them the most pernicious and extravagant lengths, I grant that this denomination is well applied. But if by the term, Independents, we are to understand a religious sect, the ancestors of those who still bear the same title in England, it appears very questionable to me, whether the unhappy fate of the worthy prince abovementioned ought to be imputed entirely to that fet of men. They who affirm that the Independents were the only authors of the death of King CHARLES, must mean one of these two things, either that the Regicides were animated and fet on by the feditious doctrines of that fect, and the violent fuggestions of its members, or that all who were concerned in this atrocious deed were themselves Independents, zealously attached to the religious community now under confideration. Now it may be proved, with the clearest evidence, that neither of these was the case. There is nothing in the doctrines of this fect, so far as they are known to me, that feems in the least adapted to excite men to such a horrid deed: nor does it appear from the history of these times, that the Independents were a whit more exasperated against CHARLES, than were the Presbyterians. And as to the latter supposition, it is far from being true, that all those who were concerned in bringing this unfortunate prince to the fcaffold were Independents; fince we learn from the best English writers, and from the public declarations of CHARLES II., that this violent faction was composed of persons of different sects. That there were Independents among them, may be easily conceived. After all; this matter will be best unravelled by the English writers. in this their notion of ecclefiaftical government, CENT. that the difference between them and the Prefby-

SECT. II. terians PART II.

writers, who know best in what sense the term Independents is used, when it is applied to those who brought CHARLES I. to the block *.

On inquiring, with particular attention, into the causes of that odium that has been cast upon the Independents, and of the heavy accufations and fevere invectives with which they have been loaded, I was more peculiarly flruck with the three following confiderations, which will perhaps furnish a fatisfactory account of this matter. In the first place, the denomination of Independents is ambiguous, and is not peculiar to any one distinct order of men. For, not to enumerate the other notions that have been annexed to this term, it is sufficient to obferve, that it is used fometimes by the English writers to denote those who aim at the establishment of a purely democratical or popular government, in which the body of the people is clothed with the supreme dominion. Such a faction there was in England, composed, in a great measure, of persons of an enthusiastical character and complexion; and to it, no doubt, we are to ascribe those scenes of sedition and misery.

* Dr. Mosheim's defence of the Independents is certainly specious; but he has not fufficiently diftinguished the times; and he has perhaps, in defending them, strained too far that equitable principle, that we must not impute to a fect any principles that are not contained in, or deducible from, their religious fystem. This maxim does not entirely answer here the purpose for which it is applied. The religious system of a sect may be in itself pacific and innocent, while, at the fame time, certain incidental circumstances, or certain affociations of ideas, may render that fect more turbulent and reftless than others, or at least involve it in political factions and broils. Such perhaps was the case of the Independents at certain periods of time, and more especially at the period now under confideration. When we confider their religious form of go ernment, we shall see evidently, that a principle of analogy (which influences the sentiments and imaginations of men much more than is generally supposed) must naturally have led the greatest part of them to republican notions of civil government; and it is further to be observed, that from a republican government, they must have expected much more protection and favour than from a kingly one. When these two things are confidered, together with their fituation under the reign of CHARLES I. when the government was unhinged, when things were in confusion, when the minds of men were suspended upon the issue of the national troubles, and when the eager spirit of party, nourished by hope, made each faction expect that the chaos would end in some settled fystem, favourable to their respective views, sentiments, and passions; this will engage us to think, that the Independents, at that time, may have been much more tumultuous and republican than the fect that bears that denomination in our times. The reader, that would form just ideas of the matter of fact, must examine the relations given by the writers of both parties. See particularly Clarendon's Hiflery of his own Life.—Neal's Hiflery of the vernicularly of England, vol. v. Edit. in Quarto.—Burnet's Hiflery of the rown Times, vol. i. p. 46, 47. Dd z

whole

CENT. terians principally confifts; for their religious XVII.
SECT II. doctrines, except in fome points of very little moPART II. ment, whose effects are still lamented with justice. The violence and folly that dishonoured the proceedings of this tumultuous faction have been, if I am not miltaken, too rashly imputed to the religious Independents now under confideration, who, with all their defects, were a much better fet of men than the perfons now mentioned. It may be observed further, secondly, that almost all the religious seets, which divided the English nation in the reign of CHARLES I., and more cspecially under the administration of CROMWELL, assumed the denomination of Independents, in order to skreen themselves from the reproaches of the public, and to share a part of that popular efleem that the true and genuine Independents had acquired, on account of the regularity of their lives and the fanctity of their manners. This is confirmed, among other testimonies, by the following passage of a letter from Toland to Le Clerc: Au commencement tous les sectaires se disoient INDEPENDANS, parce que ces derniers ctoient fort bonorés du peuple à cause de leur picté. See LE CLERC's Biblioth. Univerf. et Histor. tom. xxiii. p. ii. p. 506. As this title was of a very extensive fignification, and of great latitude, it might thus easily happen, that all the enormities of the various fects who sheltered themselves under it, and feveral of whom were but of fhort duration, might unluckily be laid to the charge of the true Independents. But it must be particularly remarked, in the third place, that the usurper CROMWELL preferred the Independents before all other religious communities. He looked, with an equal eye of suspicion and fear, upon the Presbyterian synods and the Episcopal visitations; every thing that looked like an extensive authority, whether it was of a civil or religious nature, excited uneafy apprehensions in the breast of the tyrant; but in the limited and simple form of ecclesiastical discipline, that was adopted by the Independents, he saw nothing that was adapted to alarm his fears. This circumstance was sufficient to render the Independents odious in the eyes of many, who would be naturally disposed to extend their abhorrence of CROM-WELL to those who were the objects of his favour and protection.

[q] The Independents were undoubtedly so called from their maintaining that all Christian congregations were so many Independent religious societies, that had a right to be governed by their own laws, without being subject to any further or so-reign jurisdiction. ROBINSON, the sounder of the sect, makes express use of this term in explaining his doctrine relating to ecclesiastical government: Castam quantiblest particularem (says)

he.

ment, are almost entirely the same with those that CENT. are adopted by the church of Geneva. The SECT. II. founder of this fect was JOHN ROBINSON, a man PART II. who had much of the folemn piety of the times, and was mafter of a congregation of Brownists, that had fettled at Leyden. This well-meaning man, perceiving the defects that reigned in the discipline of Brown, and in the spirit and temper of his followers, employed his zeal and diligence in correcting them, and in modelling anew the fociety, in such a manner as to render it less odious to his adversaries, and less liable to the just cenhe, in his Apologia, cap. v. p. 22.) effe totam, integram, et perfectam ecclifiam ex fuis partibus confiantem, immediate et INDE-PENDENTER (quoud alias eccletias) fub ipfo Christo. It may possibly have been from this very passage that the title of Independents was originally derived. The disciples of ROBINson did not reject it; nor indeed is there any thing shocking in the title, when it is understood in a manner conformable to the fentiments of those to whom it is applied. It was certainly utterly unknown in England before the year 1640; at least it is not once mentioned in the ecclefiaffical canons and conflitutions that were drawn up, during that year, in the fynods or visitations held by the archbishops of Canterbury, York, and other prelates, in which canons all the various fects that then fubfifted in England are particularly mentioned. See WILKIN's Concilia Magna Britannia et Hibernia, vol. iv. cap. v. p. 548. where are the constitutions and canons ecclesiastical, treated upon by the archbishops of Canterbury and York, and the rest of the bishops and clergy, in their several synods. An MDCXL. It is true, that not long after this period, and more particularly from the year 1642, we find this denomination very frequently in the English Annals. The English Independents were so far from being displeased with it, that they assumed it publicly in a piece they published in their own defence at London, in the year 1644, under the following title: Apologetical Narration of the Independents. But when in process of time a great variety of fects, as has been already observed, theltered themselves under the cover of this extensive denomination, and even seditious fubjects, that aimed at nothing less than the death of their fovereign and the destruction of the government, employed it as a mask to hide their deformity, then the true and genuine Independents renounced this title, and substituted another less odious in its place, calling themselves Congregational Brethren, and their religious affemblies Congregational Churches. Dd 3

furc

SECT. II.

CENT. fure of those true Christians, who looked upon charity as the end of the commandment. Independents, accordingly, were much more commendable than the Brownists in two respects. They surpassed them both in the moderation of their fentiments, and the order of their discipline. They did not, like Brown, pour forth bitter and uncharitable invectives against the churches that were governed by rules entirely different from theirs, nor pronounce them, on that account, unworthy of the Christian name. On the contrary, though they confidered their own form of ecclefiastical government as of divine institution, and as originally introduced by the authority of the apostles, nay, by the apostles themselves, yet they had candour and charity enough to acknowledge, that true religion and folid piety might flourish in those communities, which were under the jurisdiction of bishops, or the government of fynods and presbyteries. They were also much more attentive than the Brownists in keeping on foot a regular ministry in their communities; for while the latter allowed promiscuously all ranks and orders of men to teach in public, and to perform the other pastoral functions, the Independents had, and still have, a certain number of ministers, chosen respectively by the congregations where they are fixed; nor is any person among them permitted to speak in public, before he has submitted to a proper examination of his capacity and talents, and been approved of by the heads of the congregation. This community, which was originally formed in Holland, in the year 1610, made at first but a very small progress in England [qq]; it worked its way flowly, and in a clandestine manner: and its members concealed their principles from public view, to avoid the CENT. penal laws that had been enacted against Non- XVII. conformists. But during the reign of CHARLES I., PART II. when, amidst the shocks of civil and religious difcord, the authority of the bishops and the cause of episcopacy began to decline, and more particularly about the year 1640, the Independents grew more courageous, and came forth with an air of resolution and confidence, to public view. After this period, their affairs took a prosperous turn; and, in a little time, they became fo considerable, both by their numbers and by the reputation they acquired, that they vied in point of pre-eminence and credit, not only with the bishops, but also with the Presbyterians, though at this time in the very zenith of their power. This rapid progress of the Independents was, no doubt, owing to a variety of causes; among which justice obliges us to reckon the learning of their teachers, and the regularity and fanctity of their manners [r]. During the administration of Cromwell, whose peculiar protection and patronage they enjoyed on more than one account, their credit arose to the greatest height, and their influence and repu-tation were universal; but after the restoration of CHARLES II., their cause declined, and they fell back gradually into their primitive obscurity. The fect, indeed, still subsisted; but in such a flate of dejection and weakness, as engaged them in the year 1691, under the reign of King WIL-LIAM, to enter into an affociation with the Presbyterians residing in and about London, under certain heads of agreement that tended to the maintenance of their respective institutions [s]. XXII.

^[99] In the year 1616, Mr. JACOB, who had adopted the religious fentimen s of Robinson, fet up the first Independent or Congregational church in England.

[s] From this time they were called United Bretbren. The heads of agreement that formed and cemented this union are Dd 4

[[]r] NEAL's History of the Puritans, vol. ii. p. 107. 293. vol. viii. p. 141. 145. 276. 303. 437. 549. See also a German work, entitled, Englische Resormations-Historie, by An-THONY WILLIAM BOHM, p. 794.

CENT.
A.II.
SECT. II.
PART II.

XXII. While OLIVER CROMWELL held the reins of government in Great Britain, all fects, even

The flate of the burch of E gland under Cromwell to be found in the fecond volume of WHISTON's Memoirs of bis Life and Writings, and they confift in Nine Articles. The First relates to Churches and Church Members, in which the United Ministers, Presbyterians and Independents, declare, among other things, That each particular church had a right to chase their own officers; and being furnified with fuch as are duly qualified and ordained according to the Goffel rule, bath authority from Christ for exercising government, and enjoying all the ordinances of worthip within itself-That, in the administration of churchpower, it belongs to the pastors and other elders of every particular church (if fuch there be) to rule and govern; and to the brotherhood to conjent, according to the rule of the Gofpel. In this both Presbyterians and independents depart from the primitive principles of their respective institutions. Article II. relates to the Ministry, which they grant to have been instituted by LESUS CHRIST, for the gathering, guiding, edifying, and governing of his church; in this article it is further observed, that ministers ought to be endued with competent learning, sound judgment, and folid piety; that none are to be ordained to the work of the ministry, but such as are chosen and called thereunto by a particular church; that, in such a weighty matter, it is ordinarily requisite, that every such church consult and advise with the palors of neighbouring congregations; and that after fuch advice the feefon thus confided about, being chosen by the brotherhood of that particular church, be duly ordained and fet apart to his office over them. Article III. relates to Confures, and prescribes, first, the admonishing, and, if this prove ineffectual, the excommunication of offending and fcandalous members to be performed by the pastors, with the consent of the brethren. Article IV. concerning the Communion of Churches, lays it down as a principle, that there is no subordination between particular churches; that they are all equal, and confequently independent; that the pastors, however, of these churches ought to have frequent meetings together, that, by mutual advice, Support, encouragement, and brotherly intercourse, they strengthen the hearts and hands of each other in the ways of the Lord. In Article V. which relates to Deacons and Ruling Elders, the United Brethren acknowledge, that the office of a deacon is of divine appointment, and that it belongs to their office to receive, lay out, and distribute, the slock of the church to its proper uses; and as there are different sentiments about the office of Ruling Elders, who labour not in word and doctrine, they agree, that this difference makes no breach among them. In Article VI. concerning Occasional Meetings of Ministers, &cc. the brethren agree, that it is needful, in weighty and difficult even those that dishonoured true religion in the CENT. most shocking manner by their fanaticism or their $\frac{2NVII}{8 \text{ g c c r. II.}}$ ignorance, enjoyed a full and unbounded liberty PART II. of professing publicly their respective doctrines. The Episcopalians alone were excepted from this toleration, and received the most severe and iniquitous treatment. The bishops were deprived of their dignities and revenues, and felt the heavy hand of oppression in a particular manner. But though the toleration extended to all other fects and religious communities, yet the Presbyterians and Independents were treated with peculiar marks of distinction and savour. CROMWELL, though attached to no one particular fect, gave the latter extraordinary proofs of his good-will, and augmented their credit and authority, as this feemed the eafiest and least exasperating method of fetting bounds to the ambition of the Presbyterians, who aimed at a very high degree of ecclefiaftical power [t]. It was during this period of religious ficult cases, that the ministers of several churches meet together, in order to be confulted and advised with about such matters; and that particular churches ought to have a reverential regard to their judgment so given, and not disjent therefrom without apparent grounds from the word of God. Article VII. which relates to the Demeanor of the Brethren towards the Civil Magistrate, prescribes obedience to, and prayers for God's protection and bleffing upon, their rulers. In Article VIII. which relates to a Confession of Faith, the brethren esteem it sufficient, that a church acknowledge the Scriptures to be the word of God, the perfect and only rule of faith and practice, and ozon either the doctrinal part of the articles of the church of England, or the Westminster Confession and Catechisms, drawn up by the Prefbyterians, or the Confession of the Congregational Brethren (i. e. the Independents), to be agreeable to the faid rule. Article IX. which concerns the duty and deportment of the Brethren towards these that are not in communion with them, inculcates charity and moderation. It appears from these articles, that the Independents were led, by a kind of necessity, to adopt, in many things, the fentiments of the Presysterians, and to depart thus far from the original principles of their fect.

*A little after CROMWELL's elevation, it was refolved by the parliament, at the conclusion of a debate concerning public worship and church-government, that the Presbyterian govern-

CENT. XVII. Sect. II. Part II.

religious anarchy, that the Fifth-monarchy men arose, a set of wrong-headed and turbulent enthusiasts, who expected Christ's studden appearance upon earth to establish a new kingdom; and, acting in confequence of this illusion, aimed at the subversion of all human government, and were for turning all things into the most deplorable confusion [u]. It was at this time also, that the Quakers, of whom we propose to give a more particular account [w], and the hot-headed Anabaptists [x], propagated, without restraint, their visionary doctrines. It must likewise be observed, that the Deists, headed by Sidney, Neville, Martin, and Harrington, appeared with impunity, and promoted a kind of religion, which consisted in a few plain ment should be the established government. The Independents were not, as yet, agreed upon any standard of faith and discipline; and it was only a little before Chomwell's death that they held a synod, by his permission, in order to publish to the world an uniform account of their dostrine and principles.

[u] See Burner's History of his own Times, tom. i. p. 67.

[av] See in Vol. V. The History of the Quakers.

[x] We are not to imagine, by the term hot-headed (furiofi), that the Anchaptist's resembled the furious fanatics of that name that formerly excited such dreadful tumults in Germany, and more especially at Minister. This was by no means the case; the English Anabaptists differed from their Protestant brethren about the subject and mode of baptism alone; confining the former to grown Christians, and the latter to immersion or dipping. They were divided into Generals and Particulars, from their different fentiments upon the Arminian controversy. The latter, who were so called from their belief of the doctrines of Particular Election, Redemption, &c. were strict Calvinists, who separated from the Independent congregation at Leyden, in the year 1638. Their confession was composed with a remarkable spirit of modesty and charity. Their preachers were generally illiterate, and were eager in making profelytes of all that would fubmit to their immersion, without a due regard to their religious principles or their moral characters. The writers of these times represent them as tinctured with a kind of enthufiaftic fury against all that opposed them. There were, nevertheless, among them some learned and pious persons, who disapproved highly of all violent and uncharitable proceedings. precepts precepts drawn from the dictates of natural rea- c E N T.

fon [y].

XXIII. Among the various religious factions PART II. that fprung up in England during this period of The English Antinofect of Presbyterians, who were called by their ad-mians. verfaries Antinomians, or enemies of the law, and still subsist even in our times. The Antinomians are a more rigid kind of Calvinists, who pervert CALVIN's doctrine of absolute decrees to the worst purpofes, by drawing from it conclusions highly detrimental to the interests of true religion and virtue. Such is the judgment that the other Presbyterian communities form of this perverse and extravagant sect [z]. Several of the Antinomians (for they are not all precifely of the fame mind) look upon it as unnecessary for Christian ministers to exhort their flock to a virtuous practice and a pious obedience to the divine law, " fince they whom God has elected to falvation " by an eternal and immutable decree, will, by " the irrefistible impulse of divine grace, be led " to the practice of piety and virtue; while those " who are doomed by a divine decree to eter-" nal punishments, will never be engaged, by " any exhortations or admonitions, how affecting " foever they may be, to a virtuous course; nor have they it in their power to obey the divine " law, when the fuccours of divine grace are with-" held from them." From these principles they concluded, that the ministers of the Gospel discharged fufficiently their pastoral functions, when they inculcated the necessity of faith in Christ, and pro-claimed the blessings of the new covenant to their work of the latter, entitled, Bibliotheque Univerfelle et Historique, tom. xxiii. p. 505.—As also Hornbeck, Summa Controversiarum, p. 800. 812.

[y] Neal's Hiftory of the Puritans, vol. iv. p. 87.
 [≈] See Toland's Letter to Le Clerc, in the periodical

3

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PARTII.

people. Another, and a still more hideous form of Antinomianism, is that which is exhibited in the opinions of other doctors of that feet [a], who maintain, "That as the elect cannot fall from " grace, nor forfeit the divine favour, fo it fol-" lows, that the wicked actions they commit, " and the violations of the divine law with which " they are chargeable, are not really finful, nor " are to be confidered as influences of their de-" partiage from the law of God; and that, con-" fequen. they have no occasion either to con-" fels then we are to break them off by repen-" tance. Thus adults ;, he corregle, in one of " the elect, though it appear finful in the fight of " men, and be confidered universally as an enor-" mous violation of the divine law, yet is not a " fin in the fight of God, because it is one of the " effential and diffinctive characters of the elect.

Intitudinariant, XXIV. The public calamities, that flowed from these vehement and uncharitable disputes about religion, afflicted all wise and good men, and engaged several, who were not less eminent

" that they cannot do any thing which is either dif" pleasing to God, or prohibited by the law [b]."

(3) This fecond Antinomian hypothesis has certainly a fill more odious aspect than the first; and it is therefore surprising that our author should use, in the original, these terms:

Hi tantum flatuunt, Electos, &c.

[b] There is an account of the other tenets of the Antinomians, and of the modern disputes that were occasioned by the publication of the Posthumous Works of Crisp, a staming doctor of that extravagant and pernicious sect, given by Pierre Francois Le Courayer, in his Examen des defauts Theologiques, tom. ii. p. 193. Banter and Tillotson distinguished themselves by their zeal against the Antinomians; and they were also completely refuted by Dr. Williams, in his samons book, entitled, Gejfel Truth stated and windicated, 8vo. PI have been informed, since the sirst edition of this history was published, that the book, entitled, Examen des defauts Theologiques, which our author supposes to have been written by Dr. Courayer, is the production of another pen.

for their piety than for their moderation and wif- CENT. dom, to feek after fome method of uniting such SECTIL listening to the dictates of charity and reason, or, at leaft, of calming their animolities, and perfuading them to mutual forbearance. These pacific doctors offered themselves as mediators between the more violent Episcopalians on the one hand, and the more rigid Profbyterians and Independents on the other; and hoped that, when their differences were accommodated, the leffer factions would fall of themselves. The contests that reigned between the former turned partly on the forms of church-government and public worship, and partly on certain religious tenets, more especially those that were debated between the Arminians and Calvinists. To lessen the breach that kept these two great communities at such a distance from each other, the arbitrators, already mentioned, endeavoured to draw them out of their narrow inclosures, to render their charity more extensive, and widen the paths of salvation, which bigotry and party-rage had been labouring to render inacceffible to many good Christians. This noble and truly evangelical method of proceeding procured to its authors the denomination of Latitudinarians [c]. Their views, indeed, were generous and extensive. They were zealously attached to the forms of ecclefiaftical government and worship that were established in the church of England, and they recommended epifcopacy with all the thrength and power of their eloquence; but they did not go fo far as to look upon it as of divine institution, or as absolutely and indispensably necessary to the constitution of a Christian church; and hence they maintained,

[[]c] See Burner's History of his own Times, vol. i. book ii. p. 188.

CENT. that those who followed other forms of government and worship were not, on that account, to PART II. be excluded from their communion, or to forfeit the title of brethren. As to the doctrinal part of religion, they took the fystem of the famous Episcopius for their model; and, like him, reduced the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, (i. e.) those doctrines the belief of which is necessary to falvation, to a few points. By this manner of proceeding they shewed, that neither the Episcopalians, who, generally speaking, embraced the fentiments of the Arminians, nor the Presbyterians and Independents, who as generally adopted the doctrine of Calvin, had any reason to oppose each other with fuch animofity and bitterness, fince the subjects of their debates were matters of an indifferent nature with respect to salvation, and might be variously explained and understood without any prejudice to their eternal interests. The chief leaders of these Latitudinarians were HALES and CHILLINGWORTH, whose names are still pronounced in England with that veneration that is due to diftinguished wisdom and rational piety [d]. The respectable names of More,

> [d] The life of the ingenious and worthy Mr. HALES was composed in English by M. Des MAIZEAUX, and published in 8vo. at London, in the year 1719; it was confiderably augmented in the Latin translation of it, which I prefixed to the account of the fynod of Dort, drawn from the letters of that great man, and published at Hamburgh in 1724. A life of Mr. HALES, written in French, is to be found in the first volume. of the French translation of CHILLINGWORTH's Religion of Protestants, &c .- The life of CHILLINGWORTH also was drawn up by DES MAIZEAUX in English; and a French translation of it appeared, in the year 1730, at the head of the excellent book now mentioned, which was translated into that language, and published at Austerdam, in three volumes 8vo, in the year 1730. Those who are defirous of acquiring a thorough knowledge of the doctrines, government, laws, and prefent flate of the church of England, will do well to read the history of these two men; and more especially to peruse CHILLING. WORTH's admirable book already mentioned, I mean, The Religion of Protestants a jofe Way to Salvation. Cudworth, CUDWORTH, GALE, WHICHCOT, and TILLOTSON, CENT. add a high degree of lustre to this eminent list. SECT. II. The undertaking of these great men was, indeed, PART IL bold and perilous; and it drew upon them much opposition and many bitter reproaches. They received, as the first fruits of their charitable zeal, the odious appellations of Atheifts, Deifts, and Socinians, both from the Roman Catholics and the more rigid of the contending Protestant parties; but, upon the restoration of King CHARLES II., they were raised to the first dignities of the church, and were defervedly held in univerfal esteem. It is also well known, that, even at this prefent time, the church of England is chiefly governed by Latitudinarians of this kind, though there be among both bishops and clergy, from time to time, ecclefiastics who breathe the narrow and despotic spirit of LAUD, and who, in the language of faction, are called High-churchmen, or Church-tories [e].

XXV. No fooner was Charles II. re-established on the throne of his ancestors, than the ancient forms of ecclesiastical government and public worship were restored with him; and the bishops reinstated in their dignities and honours. The Non-conformists hoped, that they should be allowed to share some part of the honours and revenues of the church; but their expectations were totally disappointed, and the face of affairs changed very suddenly with respect to them. For Charles subjected to the government of bishops the churches of Scotland and Ireland, the former of which was peculiarly attached to the ecclesiastical

The flate of the church of England under Charles II. and his tucc flots.

[e] See Rapin's Differtation on the Whigs and Tories. CF See an admirable defence of the Latitudinarian divines, in a book entitled, The Principles and Practices of certain moderate Divines of the Church of England (greatly mifanderflood) truly represented and defended. London, 1670, in 8vo. This book was written by Dr. Fowler, afterwards bishop of Gioncefter. N.

discipline

Sест. 11.

CENT. discipline and polity of Geneva; and, in the year 1662, a public law was enacted, by which all who PART II. refused to observe the rites, and subscribe the doctrines, of the church of England, were entirely excluded from its communion [f]. From this period, until the reign of King WILLIAM III., the Non-conformifts were in a precarious and changing fituation, fometimes involved in calamity and trouble, at others enjoying some intervals of tranquillity and certain gleams of hope, according to the varying spirit of the court and ministry. but never entirely free from perplexities and fears [g]. But, in the year 1689, their affairs took a favourable turn, when a bill for the toleration of all Protestant diffenters from the church of England, except the Socinians, passed in parliament almost without opposition, and delivered them from the penal laws to which they had been fubjected by the AET of Uniformity, and other acts passed under the house of STUART [b]. Nor did the > [f] This was the famous Act of Uniformity, in confequence of which the validity of Presbyterian ordination was renounced; the ministrations of the foreign churches disowned; the terms of conformity rendered more difficult and raifed higher than before the civil wars; and by which (contrary to the manner of proceeding in the times of ELIZABETH and CROMWELL, who, both, referved for the jubfillence of each ejected clergyman a fifth part of his benefice) no provision was made for these who should be deprived of their livings. See WILKINS's Concilia Magnæ Britanniæ et Hiberniæ, tom iv. p. 573 .- BURNET's Hiftory of his own Times, vol. ii. p. 190, &c .- NEAL's History of the Puritans, tom. iv. p. 358.

> [g] See the whole fourth volume of NEAL's History of the Puritans.

> [b] This was called the Teleration Ast, and it may be feen at length in the Appendix, subjoined to the fourth volume of NEAL's History of the Puritans. If It is entitled, An act for exempting their Majesties Protestant Subjects, dissenting from the Church of England, from the Penaltics of creain Laws. In this bill the Corporation and Toff-Acts are emitted, and confequently still remain in force. The Socinians are also excepted; but provision the Protestant diffenters in England enjoy alone CENT. the benefits of this act; for it extended also to the SECT. II, Scots church, which was permitted thereby to PARTIL follow the ecclefiaftical discipline of Geneva, and was delivered from the jurifdiction of bishops, and from the forms of worship that were annexed to episcopacy. It is from this period that the Nonconformifts date the liberty and tranquillity they have long been bleffed with, and still enjoy; but it is also observable, that it is to the transactions that were carried on during this period, in favour of religious liberty, that we must chiefly impute the multitude of religious fects and factions, that start up from time to time in that free and happy island, and involve its inhabitants in the perplexities of religious division and controversy [i].

XXVI. In the reign of King WILLIAM, and in The Highthe year 1689, the divisions among the friends of thurch and Hon-jurous. episcopacy ran high, and terminated in that famous schism in the church of England, which has never hitherto been entirely healed. SANCROFT, archbishop of Canterbury, and seven of the other bishops [ii], all of whom were eminently distinguished both by their learning and their virtue, looked upon it as unlawful to take the oaths of allegiance to the new king, from a mistaken notion that TAMES II., though banished from his provision is made for Quakers, upon their making a folemn declaration, instead of taking the oaths to the government. This act excuses Protestant Diffenters from the penalties of the laws therein mentioned, provided they take the oaths to the government, and subscribe the Doctrinal Articles of the church of England.

[i] BURNET's History of his own Times, vol. ii. p. 23. [ii] The other Non-juring bishops were, Dr. LLOYD, bishop of Norwich; Dr. Turner, of Ely; Dr. Kenn, of Bath and Wells; Dr. FRAMPTON, of Gloucester; Dr. THO-MAS, of Worcefter; Dr. LAKE, of Chichefter; Dr. WHITE, bishop of Peterborough, dominions,

VOL. V.

Εe

CENT. XVII. SECT. 11.

dominions, remained, nevertheless, their rightful fovereign. As these scruples were deeply PART II. rooted, and no arguments nor exhortations could engage these prelates to acknowledge the title of WILLIAM III. to the crown of Great Britain, they were deprived of their ecclefiaftical dignities, and their fees were filled by other men of eminent merit [iii]. The deposed bishops and clergy formed a new episcopal church, which differed, in certain points of doctrine and certain circumftances of public worship, from the established church of England. This new religious community were denominated Non-jurors, on account of their refusing to take the oath of allegiance, and were also called the High-church, on account of the high notions they entertained of the dignity and power of the church, and the extent they gave to its prerogatives and jurisdiction. Those, on the other hand, who disapproved of this schisim, who diffinguished themselves by their charity and moderation towards Diffenters, and were less ardent in extending the limits of ecclefiaftical authority, were denominated Low-churchmen $\lceil k \rceil$. The bishops who were deprived of their ecclesiaftical dignities, and those who embarked in their

> [[iii] These were TILLOTSON, MOORE, PATRICK, KIDDER, FOWLER, and CUMBERLAND, names that will be ever pronounced with veneration by fuch as are capable of effeeming folid, well-employed learning and genuine piety, and that will always thine among the brightest ornaments of the church of England.

> [k] The denomination of High-church is given certainly, with great propriety, to the Non-jurors, who have very proud notions of church-power; but it is commonly used in a more extensive fignification, and is applied to all those who, though far from being Non-jurers, or otherwise disaffected to the prefent happy eitablishment, yet form pompous and ambitious conceptions of the authority and jurisdiction of the church, and would raife it to an absolute independence on all human power. Many fuch are to be found even among those who go under the general denomination of the Low-church party.

caufe, maintained openly, that the church was CENT. independent on the jurisdiction of king and par- SECT II. liament, subject to the authority of God alone, PART II. and empowered to govern itself by its own laws; that, of consequence, the sentence pronounced against these prelates by the great council of the nation was destitute both of justice and validity; and that it was only by the decree of an ecclesiaffical council that a bishop could be deposed. This high notion of the authority and prerogatives of the church was maintained and propagated, with peculiar zeal, by the famous HENRY Don-WELL, who led the way in this important cause, and who, by his example and abilities, formed a confiderable number of champions for its defence; hence arose a very nice and intricate controversy, concerning the nature, privileges, and authority of the church, which has not yet been brought to a fatisfactory conclusion [1].

XXVII. The

[1] Dodwell himself was deprived of his professorship of history for refusing to take the oaths of allegiance to king WILLIAM and queen MARY; and this circumstance, no doubt, augmented the zeal with which he interested himself in the defence of the bishops, who were suspended for the same reason. It was on this occasion that he published his Cautionary Discourse of Schism, with a particular regard to the case of the bishops who are suspended for refusing to take the new oats. This book was fully rejuted by the learned Dr. Hody, in the year 1691, in a work, intitled, The unreasonableness of a separation from the new bishops: or a Treatise out of Ecclesiastical History, shewing, that although a bishop was unjustly deprived, neither be nor the church ever made a separation, if the successor was not a heretic; translated out of an ancient Greek manuscript, (viz. among the Boroccian MSS.) in the public library at Oxford. The learned author translated this work afterwards into Latin, and prefixed to it some pieces out of ecclesiastical antiquity, relative to the fame subject. Dodwell published in 1692 an answer to it, which he called, A vindication of the deprived bishops, &c. to which Dr. Hony replied in a treatise, intitled, The Case of the Sees vacant by an unjust or uncanonical Deprivetion stated, in reply to the Vindication, &c. The controversy principles.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II.

High-

church

XXVII. The Non-jurors or High churchmen, who boast with peculiar oftentation of their orthodoxy, and treat the Low church as unfound and schismatical, differ in several things from the members of the episcopal church, in its present establishment; but they are more particularly diffinguished by the following principles: 1. That it is never lawful for the people, under any provocation or pretext whatever, to refift the fovereign. This is called in England passive obedience, and is a doctrine warmly opposed by many, who think it both lawful and necessary, in certain circumstances, and in cases of an urgent and momentous nature, to relift the prince for the happiness of the people. They maintain further, 2. That the hereditary fuccoffion to the throne is of divine institution, and therefore can never be interrupted, suspended, or annulled, on any pretext. 3. That the church is subject to the jurisdiction, not of the civil magistrate, but of God alone, particularly in matters of a religious nature. 4. That, conjequently, SANCROFT and the other bishops, deposed by King WILLIAM III., remained, notwithstanding their deposition, TRUE BI-SHOPS to the day of their death; and that these who were substituted in their places were the unjust possesfors of other men's property. 5. That these unjust possessors of ecclesiastical dignities were rebels against the fate, as well as schismatics in the church; and that did not end here; and it was the hardest thing in the world to reduce Mr. Dodwell to silence. Accordingly he came forth a third time with his sliss and rigid polemicks, and published, in 1695, his Defence of the Vindication of the deprivate biflogs. The preface which he designed to prefix to this work was at first suppressed but appeared asterwards under the following title: The Doctrine of the Church of England concerning the Lidependency of the Chergy on the lay-bower, as to those rights of theirs which are purely spiritual, reconciled with our tails of supremacy and the lay-deprivation of the Poptifi bishops in the beginning of the Reformation. Several other pamphlets were published on the subject of this controversy.

all, therefore, who held communion with them were CENT. also chargeable with rebellion and schifm. 6. That this schifm, which rents the church in pieces, is a most heinous sin, whose punishment must fall heavy upon all these who do not return sincerely to the true church, from which they have departed [m]

SECT. II. PART II.

XXVIII. It will now be proper to change the Theological fcene, and to confider a little the state of the Re- among the formed church in Holland. The Dutch Calvinifts Duch. thought themselves happy after the deseas of the Arminians, and were flattering themselves with the agreeable profpect of enjoying long, in tranquillity and repose, the fruits of their victory, when new fcenes of tumult arose from another quarter. Scarcely had they triumphed over the enemies of absolute predestination, when, by an ill hap, they became the prey of intestine disputes, and were divided among themselves in such a deplorable manner, that, during the whole of this century, the United Provinces were a feene of contention, animofity, and strife. It is not neceffary to mention all the fubjects of thefe religious quarrels; nor indeed would this be an eafy task. We shall therefore pass over in silence the debates of certain divines, who disputed about fome particular, though not very momentous, points of doctrine and discipline; such as those of the famous Voet and the learned Des MARETS; as also the disputes of SALMASIUS, BOXHORN, VOET, and others, concerning usury, ornaments in drefs, stage-plays, and other minute points of morality; and the contests of Appollonius, TRIGLAND, and VIDELIUS, concerning the power of the magistrate in matters of religion and eccle-

[[]m] See Whiston's Memoirs of his Life and Writings, vol. i. р. 30.—Нісків's Memoirs of the Life of JOHN KETTLEWELL, printed at London in 1718.—Nowveau Diction. Histor. et Critiq. at the article Collier .- Ph. Masson, Histor. Critique de la Repub. des Lettres, tom. xiii. p. 298.

CENT. XVII. Sect. II.

fiaftical discipline, which produced such a flaming division between Frederic Spanheim and John DART II. VANDER WAYEN. These and other debates of like nature and importance rather discover the fentiments of certain learned men, concerning fome particular points of religion and morality, than exhibit a view of the true internal state of the Belgic church. The knowledge of this must be derived from those controversies alone in which the whole church, or at least the greatest part of its doctors, have been directly concerned.

The Carteno and Cocceian contraver-

XXIX. Such were the controversies occasioned in Holland by the philosophy of Des Cartes, and the theological novelties of Cocceius. Hence arose the two powerful and numerous factions. diffinguished by the denominations of Cocceians and Voetians, which still subsist, though their debates are now less violent, and their champions fomewhat more moderate, than they were in former times. The Cocceian theology and the Cartesian philosophy have, indeed, no common features, nor any thing, in their respective tenets and principles, that was in the leaft adapted to form a connexion between them: and, of confequence, the debates they excited, and the factions they produced, had no natural relation to, or dependance on, each other. It nevertheless fo happened, that the respective votaries of these very different sciences formed themselves into one feet; fo far at leaft, that those who chose Coc-CEIUS for their guide in theology, took DES CAR-TES for their mafter in philosophy [n]. This will appear less furprifing when we confider, that the very fan e persons who opposed the progress of Cartestanism in Holland were the warm adversaries of the Cocceian theology; for this opposition, equally levelled at these two great men and their respect CENT. tive systems, laid the Cartesians and Cocceians under SECT. II. a kind of necessity of uniting their force in order PART II. to defend their cause, in a more effectual manner, against the formidable attacks of their numerous adversaries. The Voetians were so called from GISBERT VOET, a learned and eminent professor of divinity in the university of Utrecht, who first founded the alarm of this theologico-philosophical war, and led on, with zeal, the polemic legions against those who followed the standard of DES Cartes and Cocceius.

[[]n] See FRID. SPANHEMII Epistela de novissimis in Belgio diffidiis, tom. ii. opp. p. 973.

XXX. The Cartesian philosophy, at its first Cartesian appearance, attracted the attention and esteem of controlerly. many, and feemed more conformable to truth and nature, as well as more elegant and pleafing in its aspect, than the intricate labyrinths of Peripatetic wildom. It was confidered in this light in Holland; it however met there with a formidable adversary, in the year 1639, in the famous VOET, who taught theology at Utrecht with the greatest reputation, and gave plain intimations of his looking upon Cartefianism as a system of impiety. Voet was a man of uncommon application and immense learning; he had made an extraordinary progress in all the various branches of erudition and philology; but he was not endowed with a large portion of that philosophical spirit, that judges with acuteness and precision of natural science and abstract truths. While DES CARTES refided at Utrecht, VOET found fault with many things in his philosophy; but what induced him to cast upon it the aspersion of impiety, was its being introduced by the following principles: "That the perion who aspires after the " character of a true philosopher must begin by " doubting of all things, even of the existence " of a Supreme Being—that the nature or effence " of spirit, and even of God himself, consists in E e 4 " thought

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II.

" thought—that space has no real existence, is no more than the creature of fancy, and that, con-

" fequently, matter is without bounds."

DES CARTES defended his principles, with his usual acuteness, against the professor of Utrecht; his disciples and followers thought themselves obliged, on this occasion, to assist their master; and thus war was formally declared. On the other hand, VOET was not only seconded by those Belgic divines that were the most eminent, at this time, for the extent of their learning and the foundness of their theology, such as RIVET, DES MARETS, and MASTRICHT, but also was followed and applauded by the greatest part of the Dutch clergy [0]. While the flame of controverfy burned with fufficient ardour, it was confiderably augmented by the proceedings of certain doctors, who applied the principles and tenets of DES CARTES to the illustration of theological truth. Hence, in the year 1656, an alarm was raised in the Dutch churches and schools of learning, and a resolution was taken in several of their ecclesiaftical affemblies (commonly called Classes), make head against Cartesianism, and not to permit that imperious philosophy to make such encroachments upon the domain of theology. The States of Hoiland not only approved of this resolution, but also gave it new force and efficacy by a public edict, iffued out the very same year, by which both the professors of philosophy and theology were forbidden either to explain the writings of Des Cartes to the youth under their care, or to illustrate the doctrines of the Gospel by the principles of philosophy. It was further resolved, in an affembly of the clergy, held at Delft the year following, that no candidate for holy orders C ENT. should be received into the ministry before he section, made a folemn declaration, that he would neither PART II. promote the Cartesian philosophy, nor disfigure the divine fimplicity of religion, by loading it with foreign ornaments. Laws of a like tenor were afterwards passed in the United Provinces, and in other countries $\lceil p \rceil$. But, as there is in human nature a strange propensity to struggle against authority, and to purfue, with a peculiar degree of ardour, things that are forbidden, fo it happened, that all these edicts proved insufficient to ftop the progress of Cartefianism, which, at length, obtained a folid and permanent footing in the feminaries of learning, and was applied, both in the academies and pulpits, and fometimes indeed very prepofteroufly, to explain the truths and precepts of Christianity. Hence it was, that the United Provinces were divided into the two great factions already mentioned; and that the whole remainder of this century was spent amidst their contentions and debates.

^[0] Sec Baillet's Vie de M. Des Cartes, tom. ii. chap. v. p. 33.—Daniel, Voyage du Monde de Des Cartes, tom. i. de Jes Oeworcs, p. 84.

XXXI. JOHN COCCEIUS, a native of Bremen, The fantiand professor of divinity in the University of Ley-Cocceius den, might have certainly passed for a great man, concerning the Holy had his vast erudition, his exuberant fancy, his Scriptures, ardent piety, and his uncommon application to the study of the Scriptures, been under the direction of a found and folid judgment. This fingular man introduced into theology a multitude of new tenets and strange notions, which had never before entered into the brain of any other mortal, or at least had never been heard of before his time: for, in the first place, as has been al-

[[]p] Frid. Spanheim, De novissimis in Belgio dissidiis, tom. ii. opp. p. 959.—The reader may also consult the historians of this century, such as Arnold, Weismann, Jager, Caroli, and also WALCHIUS's Histor. Controvers. Germanic. tom. iii.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II.

ready hinted, his manner of explaining the Holy Scriptures was totally different from that of CAL-VIN and his followers. Departing entirely from the admirable simplicity that reigns in the commentaries of that great man, Cocceius represented the whole history of the Old Testament as a mirror, that held forth an accurate view of the transactions and events that were to happen in the church under the dispensation of the New Testament, and unto the end of the world. He even went to far, as to maintain, that the miracles, actions, and fufferings of CHRIST and of his apostles, during the course of their ministry, were types and images of future events. He affirmed, that by far the greatest part of the ancient prophecies foretold Christ's ministry and mediation, and the rife, progress, and revolutions of the church, not only under the figure of persons and transactions, but in a literal manner, and by the very fense of the words used in these predictions. And he completed the extravagance of this chimerical fystem, by turning, with wonderful art and dexterity, into holy riddles and typical predictions, even those passages of the Old Testament that feemed defigned for no other purpose than to celebrate the praifes of the Deity, or to convey some religious truth, or to inculcate fome rule of practice. In order to give an air of folidity and plaufibility to these odd notions, he first laid it down as a fundamental rule of interpretation, "That " the words and phrases of Scripture are to be un-" derstood in every sense of which they are suscep-" tible; or, in other words, that they fignify, in " effect, every thing that they can possibly signify;" a rule this, which, when followed by a man who had more imagination than judgment, could not fail to produce very extraordinary comments on the facred writings. After having laid down this fingular rule of interpretation, he divided the whole whole history of the church into feven periods, C E N T. conformable to the seven trumpets and feals men- S E C T. II. tioned in the Revelations.

-XXXII. One of the great defigns formed by Concerning Coccerus, was that of separating theology from the deciriphilosophy, and of confining the Christian doctors, in their explications of the former, to the words and phrases of the Holy Scriptures. Hence it was, that, finding in the language of the sacred writers, the Gotpel-dispensation represented under the image of a Covenant made between God and man, he looked upon the use of this image as admirably adapted to exhibit a complete and wellconnected fystern of religious truth. But while he was labouring this point, and endeavouring to accommodate the circumstances and characters of human contracts to the dispensations of divine wifdom, which they represent in such an inaccurate and imperfect manner, he fell imprudently into fome erroneous notions. Such was his opinion concerning the covenant made between God and the Tewish nation by the ministry and the mediation of Moses, "which he affirmed to be of the same nature with the New Covenant ob-" tained by the mediation of Jesus Christ." In confequence of this general principle, he maintained, "That the Ten Commandments were pro-" mulgated by Moses, not as a rule of obedience, " but as a representation of the Covenant of Grace-" that when the Jews had provoked the Deity, " by their various transgressions, particularly by " the worship of the gorden calf, the severe and " fervile yoke of the ceremonial law was added " to the decalogue, as a punishment inslicted on " them by the Supreme Being in his righteous " displeasure—that this yoke, which was painful " in itself, became doubly to on account of its " typical fignification; fince it admonished the

"Ifraelites, from day to day, of the imperfection

CENT. XVII. SECT.II. PART II.

" and uncertainty of their state, filled them with " anxiety, and was a standing and perpetual " proof that they had merited the difpleafure of "God, and could not expect, before the coming of the Messiah, the entire remission of their " transgressions and iniquities-that, indeed, good " men, even under the Mosaic dispensation, " were immediately after death made partakers " of everlasting happiness and glory; but that "they were, nevertheless, during the whole " course of their lives, far removed from that " firm hope and affurance of falvation, which re-" joices the faithful under the difpensation of the "Gospel-and that their anxiety flowed natural-" ly from this confideration, that their fins, "though they remained unpunished, were not · " pardoned, because Christ had not, as yet, of-" fered himself up a sacrifice to the Father to make " an entire atonement for them." These are the principal lines that diftinguish the Cocceian from other fystems of theology; it is attended, indeed, with other peculiarities; but we shall pass them over in filence, as of little moment, and unworthy of notice. These notions were warmly opposed by the fame persons that declared war against the Cartefian philosophy; and the contest was carried on for many years with various fuccess. But, in the iffue, the doctrines of Coccerus, like those of DES CARTES, stood their ground; and neither the dexterity nor vehemence of his adversaries could exclude his disciples from the public seminaries of learning, or hinder them from propagating, with furprifing fuccess and rapidity, the tenets of their mafter in Germany and Switzerland [g].

[[]g] See Baillet's Vie de M. Des Cartes, tom. ii. p. 33.

Daniel, Voyage du Monde de Des Cartes.—Val. AlBerti Author noute, Cartefianifmus et Cocceianifmus descripti
et refutati. Lift. 1678, in 4to.

XXXIII. The

PART II.

The controverfy fet on foot by Roell, concerning the use of reafon in religion.

SECT.II.

XXXIII. The other controversies, that divided the Belgic church during this century, arose from the immoderate propensity that certain doctors discovered towards an alliance between the Cartesian philosophy and their theological fystem. This will appear, with the utmost evidence, from the debates excited by ROELL and BECKER, which furpassed all the others, both by the importance of their fubjects and by the noise they made in the world. About the year 1686, certain Cartesian doctors of divinity, headed by the ingenious HERMAN ALEXANDER ROELL, professor of theology in the University of Francker, feemed to attribute to the dictates of reason a more extensive authority in religious matters, than they had hitherto been possessed of. The controverfy occasioned by this innovation was reducible to the two following questions: " 1. Whether "the divine origin and authority of the Holy " Scriptures can be demonstrated by reason alone, " or whether an inward testimony of the Holy " Spirit in the hearts of Christians be necessary in " order to the firm belief of this fundamental " point? 2. Whether the facred writings pro-" pose to us, as an object of faith, any thing that " is repugnant to the dictates of right reason?" These questions were answered, the former in the affirmative, and the latter in the negative, not only by Roell, but also by Vander Wayen, Wesselius, Duker, Ruardus ab Andala, and other doctors, who were opposed in this by UL-RIC NUBER, an eminent lawyer, GERARD DE VRIES, and others of inferior note [r]. The flame excited by this controverly spread itself far and wide through the United Provinces; and its progrefs was increasing from day to day, when

[[]r] See LE CLERC. Biblioth. Univers. et Historique, tom. vi. p. 388.

CENT. XVII. SECT II. PART II. the states of Friesland prudently interposed to reflore the peace of the church, by imposing silence on the contending parties. Those whose curiosity may engage them to examine with attention and accuracy the points debated in this controversy, will find, that a very considerable part of it was merely a dispute about words; and that the real difference of sentiment that there was between these learned disputants might have been easily accommodated, by proper explications on both sides.

Sentiments of Roell concerning the generarion of the Son of God.

XXXIV. Not long after this controverfy had been hushed, Roell alarmed the orthodoxy of his colleagues, and more particularly of the learned VITRINGA, by fome other new tenets, that rendered the foundness of his religious principles extremely doubtful, not only in their opinion, but also in the judgment of many Dutch divines [s]: for he maintained, "That the account we have of the " generation of the Son in the facred writings is not " to be understood in a literal sense, or as a real " generation of a natural kind;" he also affirmed, "That the afflictions and death of the right-"eous are as truly the penal effects of original fin, as the afflictions and death of the wicked " and impenitent;" and he entertained notions concerning the divine decrees, original fin, the fatiffaction of Christ, and other points of less moment, which differed in reality, or by the manner of expressing them seemed to differ greatly, from the doctrines received and established in the Dutch church [t]. The magistrates of Friesland used all

[s] For an account of Roell, fee the Bibliotheca Bremenf. Theologico-Philolog. tom. ii. p. vi. p. 707.—Casp. Burmanni Trojectum Eruditum, p. 306.

^[1] Those who are defirous of the most accurate account of the errors of Roell, will find them enumerated in a public piece composed by the Faculty of Theology at Lyden, in order to confirm the sentence of condemnation that had been pronounced all the precautions that prudence could fuggeft, to prevent these controversies from being propagated in their province; and enacted several laws for this purpose, all tending towards peace and silence. This conduct, however, was not imitated by the other provinces, where ROELL and his disciples were condemned, both in private and in public, as heretics and corrupters of divine truth [tt]. Nor did the death of this eminent man extinguish the animosity and resentment of his adversaries; for his disciples are still treated with severity; and, notwithstanding the solution protestations they have given of the soundness and purity of their religious sentiments, labour under the imputation of many concealed errors.

nounced against them by the Dutch synods; this piece is entitled, Judicium Ecclesiassicum, quo opiniones quadem Cl. H. A. ROELLII Synodice damnata sunt laudatum a Professious Theo-logia in Academia Lugduno-Batavia. Lugd. Batav. 1713, in 4to. [11] This affirmation is somewhat exaggerated, at least we must not conclude from it, that Roble was either deposed or perfecuted; for he exercised the sundions of his professorthip for several years after this at Franker, and was afterwards called to the chair of divinity at Utrecht, and that upon the most honourable and advantageous terms. The states of Friefland published an edict enjoining filence, and forbidding all professors, pastors, &c. in their province to teach the particular opinions of ROELL; and this pacific divine facrificed the propagation of his opinions to the love of peace and concord. His notion concerning the Trinity did not effectially differ from the doctrine generally received upon that mysterious and unintelligible subject; and his design seemed to be no more than to prevent Christians from bumanizing the relation between the Father and the Son. But this was wounding his brethren, the rigorous systematic divines, in a tender point; for if Anthropemorphism, or the custom of attributing to the Deity the kind of procedure in acong and judging that is usual among men (who resemble him only as imperfection refembles perfection), was banished from theology, orthodoxy would be deprived of some of its most precious phrases, and our confessions of faith and systems of doctrine would be reduced within much narrower bounds.

CENT. λVII. SECT. II.

The contest occasioned by the reculiar fentiments of Becker.

XXXV. The controversy set on foot by the ingenious BALTHAZAR BECKER, minister at Am-PART II. sterdam, must not be omitted here. This learned ecclefiastic took occasion, from the Cartesian definition of fpirit, of the truth and precision of which he was intimately perfuaded, to deny boldly all the accounts we have in the Holy Scriptures of the feduction, influence, and operations of the devil and his infernal emissaries; as also all that has been faid in favour of the existence of ghosts, fpectres, forcerers, and magicians. The long and laboured work he published, in the year 1691, upon this interesting subject, is still extant. In this fingular production, which bears the title of The World Bewitched, he modifies and perverts, with the greatest ingenuity, but also with equal temerity and prefumption, the accounts given by the facred writers of the power of Satan and wicked angels, and of persons possessed by evil spirits; he affirms, moreover, that the unhappy and malignant being, who is called in Scripture Satan, or the Devil, is chained down with his infernal ministers in Hell; so that he can never come forth from this eternal prison to terrify mortals, or to feduce the righteous from the paths of virtue. According to the Cartefian definition above mentioned, the effence of spirit confifts in thought; and, from this definition, BECKER drew his doctrine; fince none of that influence, or of those operations that are attributed to evil spirits, can be effected by mere thinking [u].

[[]u] Our historian relates here somewhat obscurely the reasoning which Berner founded upon the Cartesian defini-tion of mind or spirit. The tenor and amount of his argument is as follows: " The effence of mind is thought, and "the effence of matter is extension .- Now, since there is no " fort of conformity or connexion between a thought and ex-

[&]quot; tension, mind cannot act upon matter unless these two sub-" stances be united, as foul and body are in man :- therefore

SECT. II.

l'ART II.

Rather, therefore, than call into question the ac- C E N T: curacy or authority of Des Cartes, Becker thought proper to force the narrations and doctrines of Scripture into a conformity with the principles and definitions of this philosopher. These errors, nevertheless, excited great tumults and divisions, not only in all the United Provinces, but also in some parts of Germany, where several doctors of the Lutheran church were alarmed at its progress, and arose to oppose it [w]. Their inventor and promoter, though refuted victoriously by a multitude of adversaries, and publicly deposed from his pastoral charge, died in the year 1718, in the full perfuafion of the truth of these opinions, that had drawn upon him so much opposition, and professed, with his last breath, his fincere adherence to every thing he had written on that subject. Nor can it be faid, that this his doctrine died with him; fince it is abundantly known, that it has still many votaries and patrons, who either hold it in fecret, or profess it publicly,

" no feparate spirits, either good or evil, can act upon mankind. "Such acting is miraculous, and miracles can be performed by "God alone. It follows of confequence, that the Scripture-" accounts of the actions and operations of good and evil foi-"rits must be understood in an allegorical sense." This is BECKER's argument; and it does, in truth, little honour to his acuteness and sagacity. By proving too much, it proves nothing at all; for if the want of a connexion or conformity between thought and extension renders mind incapable of acting upon matter, it is hard to fee how their union should remove this incapacity, fince the want of conformity and connexion remains notwithstanding this union. Besides, according to this reasoning, the Supreme Being cannot act upon material beings. In vain does Becker maintain the affirmative, by having recourse to a miracle; for this would imply, that the whole course of nature was a feries of miracles, that is to fay, that there are no miracles at all.

[w] See LILIENTHALII Selecta Historia Literar. p. i. observat. ii. p. 17 .- Miscellan. Lipsiens. tom. i. p. 361. 364. where there is an explication of a fatirical medal, ftruck to expose the sentiments of BECKER. See also Nouveau Diction. Hist. et Critique, tom. i. p. 193.

Vol. V.

XXXVI. The curious reader can be no ftranger to the multitude of fects, some Christian, some

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II.

miffer

Half-Christian, some totally delirious, that have ftarted up, at different times, both in England and Dutch fects Holland. It is difficult, indeed, for those who live - Verschorifts, Hattein other countries, to give accurate accounts of these separatists, as the books that contain their doctrines and views are feldom dispersed in foreign nations. We have, however, been lately favoured with fome relations, that give a clearer idea of the Dutch fects, called Verschorists and Hattemists, than we had before entertained; and it will not therefore be improper to give here fome account of these remarkable communities. The former derives its denomination from JACOB VERSCHOOR. a native of Flushing, who, in the year 1680, out of a perverse and heterogeneous mixture of the tenets of Cocceius and Spinoza, produced a new form of religion equally remarkable for its extravagance and impiety. His disciples and followers were called Hebrews, on account of the zeal and affiduity with which they all, without diffinction of age or fex, applied themselves to the study of the Hebrew language. The Hattemists were so called from PONTIAN VAN HATTEM, a minister in the province of Zeland, who was also addicted to the sentiments of Spinoza, and was, on that account, degraded from his pastoral office. The Verschorists and Hattemists resemble each other in their religious fystems, though there must also be some points in which they differ; fince it is well known, that VAN HATTEM could never perfuade the former to unite their fect with his, and thus to form one communion. Neither of the two have abandoned the profession of the Reformed religion; they affect, on the contrary, an apparent attachment to it; and HATTEM, in particular, published a treatife upon the Catechism of Heidelberg. If I underfland stand aright the imperfect relations that have been CENT. given of the fentiments and principles of these two egg. II. communities, both their founders began by per- PART II. verting the doctrine of the Reformed church concerning Absolute Decrees, so as to deduce it from the impious system of a fatal and uncontroulable necessity. Having laid down this principle to account for the origin of all events, they went a step further into the domain of Atheism, and denied "the difference between moral good and evil, " and the corruption of human nature." From hence they concluded, "That mankind were under no fort of obligation to correct their man-" ners, to improve their minds, or to endeavour " after a regular obedience to the divine laws-"that the whole of religion confisted not in all-" ing, but in suffering—and that all the precepts " of Jesus Christ are reducible to this fingle " one, that we bear with chearfulness and patience " the events that happen to us through the " divine will, and make it our constant and only " fludy to maintain a permanent tranquillity of " mind."

This, if we are not mistaken, was the common doctrine of the two fects under confideration. There were, however, certain opinions or fancies, that were peculiar to HATTEM and his followers, who affirmed, "That CHRIST had not fatisfied " the divine justice, nor made an expiation for " the fins of men by his death and fufferings, but " had only fignified to us, by his mediation, that "there was nothing in us that could offend the "Deity." HATTEM maintained, "that this " was CHRIST's manner of justifying his fervants, " and presenting them blameless before the tri-" bunal of God." These opinions seem perverse and peftilential in the highest degree; and they evidently tend to extinguish all virtuous sentiments, and to diffolve all moral obligation. It CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II.

does not however appear, that either of these innovations directly recommended immorality and vice, or thought that men might fafely follow, without any restraint, the impulse of their irregular appetites and passions. It is at least certain, that the following maxim is placed among their tenets, that God does not punish men for their fins, but by their fins; and this maxim feems to fignify, that, if a man does not restrain his irregular appetites. he must suffer the painful fruits of his licentiousnefs, both in a prefent and future life, not in confequence of any judicial fentence pronounced by the will, or executed by the immediate hand of God, but according to fome fixed law or conftitution of nature [x]. The two fects still subsist, though they bear no longer the names of their founders.

The difputes in Seving wland concerning the Confenfus or from of concord.

MMAVII. The churches of Switzerland, so early as the year 1669, were alarmed at the progress which the opinions of AMYRAUT, DE LA PLACE, and CAPEL, were making in different countries; and they were apprehensive that the doctrine they had received from Calvin, and which had been fo folemnly confirmed by the fynod of Dert, might be altered and corrupted by these new improvements in theology. This apprehension was fo much the less chimerical, as at that very time there were, among the clergy of Geneva, certain doctors eminent for their learning and eleguence, who not only adopted these new opinions, but were also defirous, notwithstanding the opposition and remonstrances of their colleagues, of propagating them among the people [y]. To fet bounds to the zeal of these innovators, and to ftop the progress of the new doctrines,

488.497, &c.

[[]x] See Theod. Has m. Differt, in Mafeo Bremenst Theol. Philolog. vol. ii. p. 144.—Bibliotheque Belgique, tom. ii. p. 203.
[x] See Lett Islovia Genevirna, part iv. book v. p. 448.

cords

trines, the learned John Henry Heidegger, cent. professor of divinity at Zurich, was employed in XVII. the year 1675 by an affembly, composed of the FART II. most eminent Helvetic divines, to draw up a form of doctrine, in direct opposition to the tenets and principles of the celebrated French writers mentioned above. The magistrates were engaged, without much difficulty, to give this production the stamp of their authority; and to add to it the other confessions of faith received in the Helvetic church, under the peculiar denomination of the Form of Concord. This step, which seemed to be taken with pacific views, proved an abundant fource of division and discord. Many declared, that they could not conscientiously subscribe this new form; and thus unhappy tumults and contests arose in several places. Hence it happened, that the canton of Bafil and the republic of Geneva, perceiving the inconveniencies that proceeded from this new article of church-communion, and

[z] It must not be imagined, from this expression of our historian, that this Form, entitled the Confensus, was abrogated at Bafil by a positive edict. The case stood thus: Mr. PETER WERENFELS, who was at the head of the ecclefiaftical confiftory of that city, paid fuch regard to the letter of the elector, as to avoid requiring a subscription to this Form from the candidates for the ministry; and his conduct, in this respect, was imitated by his fucceffors. The remonstrances of the elector do not feem to have had the fame effect upon those that governed the church of Geneva; for the Confensus, or Form of Agreement, maintained its credit and authority there until the year 1706, when, without being abrogated by any politive act, it fell into disuse. In several other parts of Switzerland, it was Rill impoted as a rule of faith, as appears by the letters addressed by Ff3 George ftrongly folicited, in the year 1686, by Frederic William, elector of Brandenburg, to ease the burthened consciences of their clergy, abrogated this form [z]. It is nevertheless certain, that in the other cantons it maintained its authority for some time after this period; but, in our time, the dis-

CENT. cords it has excited in many places, and more XVII particularly in the University of Laufanne, have contributed to deprive it of all its authority, and to fink it into utter oblivion [a].

George I., king of England, as also by the king of Pruffia, in the year 1723, to the Swiss Cantons, in order to procure the abrogation of this Form, or Confensus, which was considered as an objecte to the union of the Reformed and Lutheran churches. See the Memoires pour servir à Phistoire des troubles arrivées en Swisse à Poccasion du Consensus, published in 8vo at Amsterdam, in the year 1726.

[a] See Christ. Matth. Pfaffii Schediasma de Formula. Consensus Helvetica, published in 4to at Tubingen, in the year 1723.— Memoires pour servir à l'Histoire des troubles arrivées ca

Si ise à l'occasion du Consensus.

H E

SEVENTEENTH CENTURY.

SECTION II.

CHAP. III.

Concerning the ARMINIAN CHURCH.

I. HERE forung forth from the bosom of CENT.

WILL

Step 1. II.

Step 1. II. two new fects, whose birth and progress were, for a long time, painful and perplexing to the parent The denothat bore them. These sects were the Arminians and Quakers, whose origin was owing to very different principles; fince the former derived its existence from an excessive propensity to improve the faculty of reason, and to follow its dictates and discoveries; while the latter sprung up, like a rank weed, from the neglect and contempt of The Arminians derive their human reason. name and their origin from JAMES ARMINIUS, or HARMENSEN, who was first pastor at Amsterdam, afterwards professor of divinity at Leyden, and who attracted the esteem and applause of his very enemies, by his acknowledged candour, penetra-tion, and piety [a]. They received also the denomination

mination of

[[]a] The most ample account we have of this eminent man is given by BRANDT, in his Historia Vita JAC. ARMINII, published at Leyden in 8vo, in 1724; and the year after by

XVII. SECT. II. PART II.

CENT. nomination of Remonstrants, from an humble petition, entitled their Remonstrances, which they addressed, in the year 1610, to the states of Holland, and as the patrons of Calvinism presented an address, in opposition to this, which they called their Counter-remonstrances, so did they, in confequence thereof, receive the name of Counterremonstrants.

The comme, crment of Arminianiim.

II. Arminius, though he had imbibed in his tender years the doctrines of Geneva, and had even received his theological education in the university of that city, yet rejected, when he arrived at the age of manhood, the fentiments, concerning Predestination and the Divine Decrees, that are adopted by the greatest part of the Reformed churches, and embraced the principles and communion of those, whose religious system extends the love of the Supreme Being, and the merits of Jesus Christ, to all mankind [b]. As time me at Brunfavick, with an additional Preface and fome Annotations. See also Nouveau Distinnaire Histor. et Critique, tom. i. p. 471. All the works of ARMINIUS are comprised in one moderate quarto volume. The edition I have now before me was printed at Francfort, in the year 1634. They who would form a just and accurate notion of the temper, genius, and doctrine of this divine, will do well to perufe, with particular attention, that part of his works that is known under the title of his Disputationes publica et privata. There is, in his manner of reasoning, and also in his phraseology, some little remains of the scholastic jargon of that age; but we find, neverthelefs, in his writings, upon the whole, much of that amplicity and perspicuity which his followers have always looked upon, and fill confider, as among the principal qualities of a Christian minister. For an account of the Arminian Confessions of Faith, and the historical writers who have treated of this fect, fee Jo. CHRIST. KOECHERUS, Biblioth. Theol. Symbolica, p. 481.

[0] BERTIUS, in his Funeral Oration on ARMINIUS, BRANDT, in his Hiffery of his Life, p. 22. and almost all the ecclesiastical historians of this period, mention the occasion of this change in the fentiments of ARMINIUS. It happened in the year 1591, as appears from the remarkable letter of time and deep meditation had only ferved to con- c E N T. firm him in these principles, he thought himself obliged, by the dictates both of candour and conscience, to profess them publicly, when he had obtained the chair of divinity in the university of Leyden, and to oppose the doctrine and sentiments of CALVIN on these heads, which had been followed by the greatest part of the Dutch clergy. Two confiderations encouraged him, in a particular manner, to venture upon this open declaration of his fentiments; for he was perfuaded, on the one hand. that there were many perfons, befide himfelf, and, among thefe, fome of the first rank and dignity, that were highly difgusted at the doctrine of absolute decrees; and, on the other, he knew that the Belgic doctors were neither obliged by their confession of faith, nor by any other public law, to adopt and propagate the principles of CALVIN. Thus animated and encouraged, Arminius taught his fentiments publicly, with great freedom and equal fuccess, and perfuaded many of the truth of his doctrine; but as Calvinism was at this time in a flourishing flate in Holland, this freedom procured him a multitude of enemies, and drew upon him the feverest marks of disapprobation and refentment from those that adhered to the theological fystem of Geneva, and more especially from FRANCIS GOMAR, his colleague. Thus commenced that long, tedious, and intricate controversy, that afterwards made fuch a noise in Europe. Arminius died in the year 1609, when it was just beginning to involve his country in contention and difcord [c].

ARMINIUS

PART II.

III. After

ARMINIUS to GRYNÆUS, which bears date that fame year, and in which the former propofes to the latter fome of his theological doubts. This letter is published in the Biblioth. Brem. Theel. Philolog. tom. iii. p. 384.

[c] The history of this controversy, and of the public discords and tumelts it occasioned, is more circumstantially related by BRANKT,

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II.

The progrets of Arminianism.

III. After the death of Arminius, the combat seemed to be carried on, during some years, between the contending parties, with equal fuccefs; fo that it was not easy to foresee which side would gain the ascendant. The demands of the Arminians were moderate; they required no more than a bare toleration for their religious fentiments $\lceil d \rceil$; and fome of the first men in the republic, fuch as OLDENBARNEVELDT, GROTIUS, HOOGERBEETS, and feveral others, looked upon these demands as reasonable and just. It was the opinion of these great men, that as the points in debate had not been determined by the Belgic confellion of faith, every individual had an unquestionable right to judge for himfelf; and that more especially in a free state, which had thrown off the voke of spiritual despotism and civil tyranny. In consequence of this persuasion, they used their utmost efforts to accommodate matters, and left no methods unemployed to engage the Calvinifts to treat with Christian moderation and forbear-

BRANDT, in the fecond and third volumes of his Hiftory of the Reformation, than by any other writer. This excellent history is written in Dutch; but there is an abridgment of it in French, in three volumes 8vo, which has been translated into English. Add to this, UYTENBOGARD's Ecclefication History, written alfo in Dutch .- LIMBORCHI Historia vita Episcopii .-The Epistolæ Clarorum Virorum, published by LIMBORCH .-Those who defire a more concise view of this contest will find it in LIMBORCH's Relatio Historica de origine et progressu Controversiarum in Fæderato Belgio de Prædestinatione et capitibus annexis, which is subjoined to the latter editions of his Theologia Christiana, or Body of Divinity. It is true, all these are Arminians, and, as impartiality requires our hearing both fides, the reader may confult TRIGLAND's Ecclefiastical History, composed likewise in Dutch, and a prodigious number of Polemical writings published against the Arminians.

[d] This toleration was offered them in the conference held at the Hague, in the year 1611, provided they would renounce the errors of Socinianism. See TRIGLAND, loc. cit.—See also HENRY BRANDT'S Collatio scripto babita Hague-

camitum, printed at Zericzée, in 1715.

ance their diffenting brethren. These efforts were CENT. at first attended with some prospect of success. MAURICE, prince of Orange, and the Princess PART II. Dowager his mother, countenanced these pacific measures, though the former became afterwards one of the warmest adversaries of the Arminians. Hence a conference was held, in the year 1611, at the Hague, between the contending parties; another at Delft, in the year 1613; and hence also that pacific edict issued out in 1614, by the flates of Holland, to exhort them to charity and mutual forbearance; not to mention a number of expedients applied in vain to prevent the schissin that threatened the church [e]. But these meafures confirmed, inftead of removing, the apprehensions of the Calvinists; from day to day they were still more firmly perfuaded, that the Arminians aimed at nothing less than the ruin of all religion; and hence they cenfured their magistrates with great warmth and freedom, for interposing their authority to promote peace and union with such adversaries [f]. And those, who are well informed and impartial, must candidly acknowledge, that the Arminians were far from be-

XVII. SECT. II.

[e] The writers who have given accounts of these transactions are well known: we shall only mention the first and fecond volumes of the Histoire de Louis XIII., by LE VASSOR, who treats largely and accurately of these religious commotions, and of the civil transactions that were connected with them.

[f] The conduct of the States of Holland, who employed not only the language of perfuation, but also the voice of authority in order to calm these commotions, and restore peace in the church, was defended, with his usual learning and eloquence, by GROTIUS, in two treatifes. The one, which contains the general principles on which this defence is founded, is entitled, De jure summarum potestatum circa sucra; the other, in which these principles are peculiarly applied in justifying the conduct of the States, was published, in the year 1613, under the following title: Ordinum Hollandie se Welfrifie Pictas a multorum çalumniis vindicata.

XVII. Sect. II. PART II.

C E N T. ing fufficiently cautious in avoiding connexions with persons of loose principles; and that by frequenting the company of those, whose fentiments were entirely different from the received doctrines of the Reformed church, they furnished their enemies with a pretext for suspecting their own principles, and prefenting their theological system in the worst colours.

The five articles (1 Arminianifm.

IV. It is worthy of observation, that this unhappy controversy, which assumed another form. and was rendered more comprehensive by new subjects of contention, after the fynod of Dort, was, at this time, confined to the doctrines relating to Predestination and Grace. The sentiments of the Arminians, concerning these intricate points, were comprehended in five articles. They held,

"1. That God, from all eternity, determined " to bestow salvation on those whom he foresaw " would persevere unto the end in their faith in " CHRIST JESUS; and to inflict everlatting punish-" ments on those who should continue in their

" unbelief, and refift, unto the end, his divine

" fuccours:

" 2. That Jesus Christ, by his death and " fufferings, made an atonement for the fins of all " mankind in general, and of every individual in articular: -- that, however, none but those who " believe in him can be partakers of their divine " benefit.

" 3. That true faith cannot proceed from the " exercise of our natural faculties and powers, nor " from the force and operation of free-will; fince man, in confequence of his natural corruption,

" is incapable either of thinking or doing any " good thing; and that therefore it is necessary " to his conversion and salvation, that he be reer generated and renewed by the operation of the " Holy Ghost, which is the gift of God, through " JESUS CHRIST.

"4. That this Divine Grace, or energy of the CENT.
"Holy Ghoft, which heals the diforder of a cor-" rupt nature, begins, advances, and brings to PART II. " perfection every thing that can be called good "in man; and that, confequently, all good " works, without exception, are to be attributed " to God alone, and to the operation of his er grace; that, nevertheless, this grace does not " force the man to act against his inclination, but " may be refifted and rendered ineffectual by the " perverse will of the impenitent sinner.

5. That they who are united to Christ by " faith are thereby furnished with abundant " ftrength, and with fuccours fufficient to enable "them to triumph over the feduction of Satan, " and the allurements of fin and temptation; "but that the question, IV hether fuch MAY fall "from their faith, and forfeit finally this state of " grace? has not been yet refolved with fufficient " perspicuity; and must, therefore, be yet more " carefully examined by an attentive fludy of " what the holy Scriptures have declared in re-" lation to this important point."

It is to be observed, that this last article was afterwards changed by the Arminians, who, in process of time, declared their sentiments with less caution, and positively affirmed, that the faints might fall from a state of grace [g].

If we are to judge of men's tentiments by their words and declarations, the tenets of the Arminians, at the period of time now under confideration, bear a manifest resemblance of the Lutheran fystem. But the Calvinias did not judge in this manner; on the contrary, they explained

[[]g] The history of these Five Acticles, and more particularly of their reception and progress in England, has been written by Dr. HEYLIN, whose book was translated into Dutch by the learned and eloquent BRANDT, and published at Rotterdam in the year 1687. the

CENT.
XVII.
SECT. II.
PART II.

the words and declarations of the Arminians according to the notions they had formed of their hidden fentiments; and, instead of judging of their opinions by their expressions, they judged of their expressions by their opinions. They maintained, that the Arminians designed, under these specious and artful declarations, to infinuate the poifon of Socinianism and Pelagianism into unwary and uninftructed minds. thoughts of men are only known to Him, who is the fearcher of hearts; and it is his privilege alone to pronounce judgment upon those intentions and defigns that are concealed from public view. But if we were allowed to interpret the five articles now mentioned in a fense conformable to what the leading doctors among the Arminians have taught in later times concerning these points, it would be difficult to shew, that the fuspicions of the Calvinists were entirely groundless. For it is certain, whatever the Arminians may allege to the contrary, that the fentiments of their most eminent theological writers, after the fynod of Dort, concerning Divine Grace, and the other doctrines that are connected with it, approached much nearer to the opinions of the Pelagians and Semi-pelagians, than to those of the Lutheran church [b].

Prince
Maurice declares againft the Arminians.

V. The mild and favourable treatment the Arminians received from the magistrates of Holland, and from several persons of merit and distinction,

This is a curious remark. It would feem as if the Lutherans were not Semi-pelagians; as if they confidered man as abfolutely paffive in the work of his convertion and fanctification; but fuch an opinion furely has never been the general doctrine of the Lutheran church, however rigorously Luther may have expressed himself on that head in some unguarded moments; more especially it may be affirmed, that in later times the Lutherans are, to a man, Semi-pelagians; and let it not be thought, that this is imputed to them as a reproach.

encouraged them to hope, that their affairs would CENT. take a prosperous turn, or at least that their SECT. II. cause was not desperate, when an unexpected PART II. and fudden ftorm arose against them, and blasted their expectations. This change was owing to causes entirely foreign to religion; and its origin must be sought for in those connexions, which can scarcely be admitted as possible by the philosopher, but are perpetually presented to the view of the historian. A secret missunderstanding had for fome time subsisted between the Stadtholder MAURICE, prince of Orange, and fome of the principal magistrates and ministers of the new republic, fuch as OLDENBARNEVELDT, GROTIUS, and HOOGERBEETS; and this mifunderstanding had at length broke out into an open enmity and discord. The views of this great prince are differently represented by different historians. Some allege, that he had formed the defign of getting himself declared count of Holland, a dignity which WILLIAM I., the glorious founder of Belgic liberty, is also said to have had in view [i]. Others affirm, that he only affired

[i] That MAURICE aimed at the dignity of Count of Holland, we learn from Aubery's Memoires pour servir à l'Histoire de Hollande et des autres Provinces Uniss, fect. ii. p. 216. Ed. Paris. If we are to believe AUBERY (informed by his father, who was, at that time, ambassador of France at the Hague), OLDENBARNEVELDT disapproved of this design, prevented its execution, and loft his life by his bold opposition to the views of the prince. This account is looked upon as erroneous by LE VASSOR, who takes much pains to refute it, and indeed with success, in his Histoire de Louis XIII., tom. ii. p. ii. p. 123. LE CLERK, in his Biblioth. Choifie, tom. ii. p. 134. and in his History of the United Provinces, endeavours to confirm what is related by AUBERY; and also assirms, that the project, formed by MAURICE, had been formed before by his father. The determination of this debated point is not necessary to our present purpose. It is sufficient to observe, what is acknowledged on all fides, that OLDENBARNEVELDT and his affociates suspected Prince MAURICE of a design to encroach than feerned confiftent with the liberties of the republic; it is at least certain, that some of the principal persons in the government suspected him of aiming at supreme dominion. The leading men above-mentioned opposed these designs; and these leading men were the patrons of the Arminians. The Arminians adhered to these their patrons and defenders, without whose aid they could have no prospect of security or protection. Their adversaries the Gomarists, on the contrary, seconded the views, and espoused the interests of the prince, and inflamed his refentment, which had been already more or less kindled by various fuggestions, to the disadvantage of the Arminians, and of those who protected them. Thus, after mutual fuspicions and discontents, the flame broke out with violence; and MAURICE refolved the downfal of those who ruled the republic, without shewing a proper regard to his counsels; and also of the Arminians, who espoused their cause. The leading men, that fat at the helm of government, were cast into prison. OLDENBARNEVELDT, a man of gravity and wisdom, whose hairs were grown grey in the fervice of his country, loft his life on a public scaffold; while GROTIUS and Hoogerbeets were condemned to a perpetual prison $\lceil k \rceil$, under what pretext, or in consequence encroach upon the liberties of the republic, and to arrogate to himfelf the fupreme dominion. Hence the zeal of Barneveldt to weaken his influence and to fet bounds to his authority; hence the indignation and refeatment of Maurice; and hence the downfal of the Arminian fect, which enjoyed the patronage, and adhered to the interests, of Oldenbarne-veldt and Grotius.

C E N T. XVII. Sect. II. Part II.

[k] The truth of this general account of these unhappy divinous will undoubtedly be acknowledged by all parties, particularly at this period of time, when these tumults and commotions have subsided, and the spirit of party is less blind, partial.

of what accufations or crimes, is unknown to CENT. us [1]. As the Arminians were not charged with XVII. any Part II.

partial and violent. And the candid and ingenuous Calvinifts who acknowledge this, will not thereby do the fmallest prejudice to their cause. For should they even grant (what I neither pretend to affirm nor deny) that their ancestors, carried away by the impetuous spirit of the times, defended their religious opinions in a manner that was far from being confiftent with the dictates of moderation and prudence, no rational conclusion can be drawn from this, either against them or the goodness of their cause. For it is well known, both by observation and experience, that unjustifiable things have often been done by men, whose characters and intentions, in the general, were good and upright; and that a good cause has frequently been maintained by methods that would not bear a rigorous examination. What I have faid with brevity on this subject is confirmed and amplified by LE CLERC, in his Hiftoire des Provinces Unies, and the Biblioth. Choisie, tom. ii. p. 134. and also by GROTIUS, in his Apologeticus eorum, qui Hollandiæ et Westfrisiæ, et vicinis quibusdam nationibus præfuerant ante mutationem quæ evenit, An. 1618. The life of OLD-ENBARNEVELDT, written in Dutch, was published at the Hague in 4to. in the year 1648. The history of his trial, and of the judgment pronounced on the famous triumvirate, mentioned above, was drawn by GERARD BRANDT, from authentic records, and published under the following title: Histoire van de Rechtspleginge gehouden in den jgaren 1618 et 1619, omtrent de drie gewangene Heeren JOHANN VAN OLDENBARNE-VELDT, ROMBOUT HOOGERBEETS, en HUGO DE GROOT; a third edition of this book, augmented with Annotations, was published in 4to. at Rotterdam, in the year 1723. The History of the Life and Actions of GROTIUS, composed in Dutch by CASPAR BRANDT and ADRIAN VAN CATTENBURGH, and drawn mostly from original papers, casts a considerable degree of light on the history of the transactions now before us. This famous work was published in the year 1727, in two volumes in folio, at Dort and Amsterdam, under the following title : Histoire van het leven des Heeron Huig de Groot, beschreven tot den Anfang van zyn Gesandchap wegens de Koninginne en Kroone van Zweden aanit Hof van Vrankryck door CASPARD BRANDT, en vervolgt tot zyn dood door ADRIAN VAN CAT-TENBURGH. Those who defire to form a true and accurate notion of the character and conduct of GROTIUS, and to fee him as it were near hand, must have recourse to this excellent work; fince all the other accounts of this great man are infipid, lifeless, and exhibit little else than a poor shadow, in-VOL. V.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II

any violation of the laws, but merely with departing from the established religion, their cause PART II. was not of fuch a nature as rendered it cognizable by a civil tribunal. That, however, this cause might be regularly condemned, it was judged proper to bring it before an ecclefiaftical affembly or national fynod. This method of proceeding was agreeable to the fentiments and principles of the Calvinists, who are of opinion that all spiritual concerns and religious controversies ought to be judged and decided by an ecclefiaftical affembly or council $\lceil m \rceil$.

> stead of a real and animated substance. The life of GROTIUS, composed by Burigni in French, and published successively at Paris and Amsterdam, in two volumes in 8vo, deserves perhaps to be included in this general censure; it is at least a very indifferent and superficial performance. G There appeared in Holland a warm vindication of the memory of this great man, in a work published at Delft, in 1727, and entitled, Grotii Manes ab iniquis obtrectationibus vindicati; accedit scriptorum ejus, tum editorum tum ineditorum, Conspectus Triplex. .

See the following note.

[] Dr. Mosheim, however impartial, feems to have confulted more the authors of one fide than of the other; probably because they are more numerous, and more universally known. When he published this history, the world was not favoured with the Letters, Memoirs, and Negotiations of Sir DUDLEY CARLETON: which Lord ROYSTON (now Earl of HARDWICK) drew forth some years ago from his inestimable treasure of historical manuscripts, and presented to the public, or rather at first to a felect number of persons, to whom he distributed a fmall number of copies of these Negotiations, printed at his own expence. They were foon translated both into Dutch and French; and, though it cannot be affirmed, that the spirit of party is no where discoverable in them, yet they contain anecdotes with respect both to OLDENBARNEVELDT and GROTIUS, that the Arminians, and the other patrons of these two great men, have been studious to conceal. These anecdotes, though they may not be at all sufficient to justify the severities exercised against these eminent men, would, however, have prevented Dr. Mosheim from faying, that he knew not under what pretext they were arrested.

[m] The Calvinists are not particular in this; and in. deed it is natural that debates, purely theological, should be discussed in an assembly of Divines.

VI. Accordingly

VI. Accordingly a fynod was convoked at Dort, CENT. in the year 1618, by the counfels and influence of SECT. II. prince Maurice [n], at which were present eccle- PART II. fiaftical deputies from the United Provinces, as The fund also from the churches of England, Hessia, Bremen, of Dort. Switzerland, and the Palatinate. The leading men among the Arminians appeared before this famous affembly, to defend their cause; and they had at their head, SIMON EPISCOPIUS, who was, at that time, professor of divinity at Leyden, had formerly been the disciple of Arminius, and was admired, even by his enemies, on account of the depth of his judgment, the extent of his learning, and the force of his eloquence. This eminent man addressed a discourse, full of moderation, gravity, and elocution, to the affembled divines; but this was no fooner finished, than difficulties arose, which prevented the conference the Arminians had demanded, in order to shew the grounds, in reason and scripture, on which their opinions were founded. The Arminian deputies proposed to begin the defence of their cause by refuting the opinions of the Calvinists their adverfaries. This propofal was rejected by the fynod, which looked upon the Arminians as a fet of men that lay under the charge of herefy; and therefore thought it incumbent upon them first to declare and prove their own opinions, before [[]n] Our author always forgets to mention the order, issued out by the States-general, for the convocation of this famous fynod; and by his manner of expressing himself, and particularly by the phrase (MAURITIO auctore), would feem to infinuate, that it was by the prince that this affembly was called together. The legitimacy of the manner of convoking this fynod was questioned by OLDENBARNEVELDT, who maintained that the States-general had no fort of authority in matters of religion, not even the power of affembling a fynod; affirming that this was an act of fovereignty, that belonged to each province separately and respectively. See CARLETON's Letiers, &c.

XVII, SECT. 11. PART 11.

they could be allowed to combat the fentiments of others. The defign of the Arminians, in the propofal they made, was probably to get the people on their fide, by fuch an unfavourable re-prefentation of the Calvinifical fystem, and of the harsh consequences, that seem deducible from it, as might excite a disgust, in the minds of those that were present, against its patrons and abettors. And it is more than probable, that one of the principal reasons, that engaged the members of the fynod to reject this proposal, was a consideration of the genius and eloquence of Episco-PIUS, and an apprehension of the effects they might produce upon the multitude. When all the methods employed to perfuade the Arminians to submit to the manner of proceeding, proposed by the fynod, proved ineffectual, they were excluded from that affembly, and returned home, complaining bitterly of the rigour and partiality with which they had been treated. Their cause was nevertheless tried in their absence, and, in consequence of a strict examination of their writings, they were pronounced guilty of pestilential errors, and condemned as corrupters of the true religion. This fentence was followed by its natural effects, which were the excommunication of the Arminians, the fuppression of their religious affemblies, and the deprivation of their ministers. In this unhappy contest, the candid and impartial observer will easily perceive that there were faults committed on both sides. Which of the contending parties is most worthy of censure is a point, whose discussion is foreign to our present purpose [0].

VII. We

[[]o] The writers who have given accounts of the fynod of Dort are mentioned by Jo. Albert. Fabricius, in his Biblioth. Greec. vol. xi. p. 723. The most ample account of this famous affembly has been given by Brandt, in the second and

VII. We shall not here appreciate either the CENT. merit or demerit of the divines, that were affembled in this famous fynod; but we cannot help PART II. observing that their fanctity, wisdom, and virtue The judghave been exalted beyond all measure by the Cal- met that vinists, while their partiality, violence, and their ought to be other defects, have been exaggerated with a cer-cerning this tain degree of malignity by the Arminians [p]. There is no fort of doubt, but that, among the members of this affembly, who fat in judgment upon the Arminians, there were feveral persons equally diftinguished by their learning, piety, and integrity, who acted with upright intentions, and had not the least notion, that the steps they were taking, or encouraging, were at all inconfiftent with equity and wisdom. On the other hand, it appears with the utmost evidence, that the Arminians had reason to complain of several circumstances that strike us in the history of this remarkable period. It is plain, in the first place, that formed con-

SECT. II.

and third volumes of his History of the Reformation in the United Provinces; but, as this Author is an Arminian, it will not be improper to compare his relation with a work of the learned LEYDEKKER, in which the piety and justice of the proceedings of this fynod are vindicated against the censures of BRANDT. This work, which is composed in Dutch, was published in two volumes in 4to, at Amsterdam, in the years 1705 and 1707, under the following title: Eere van de Nationale Synode, van Dordrecht voorgestaan en bevestigd tegen de beschuldingen van G. BRANDT. After comparing diligently these two productions, I could fee no enormous error in BRANDT; for in truth, these two writers do not so much differ about sacts, as they do in the reasoning they deduce from them, and in their accounts of the causes from whence they proceeded. The reader will do well to confult the Letters of the learned and worthy Mr. JOHN HALES of Eaton, who was an impartial spectator of the proceedings of this famous synod, and who relates with candour and fimplicity what he faw and heard.

[p] All that appeared unfair to the Arminians in the proceedings of this fynod, has been collected together in a Dutch book, entitled, Nulliteten, Mishandelingen, ende anbyllike Procedurin, des Nationalen Synodi gehouden binnen Dordrecht, &c.

XVII. S E C T. II.

the ruin of their community was a point not only premeditated, but determined even before the meeting of the national fynod [q]; and that this fynod was not so much affembled to examine the PART II. doctrine of the Arminians, in order to fee whether it was worthy of toleration and indulgence, as to publish and execute, with a certain folemnity, with an air of justice, and with the suffrage and consent of foreign divines, whose authority was respectable, a fentence already drawn up and agreed upon by those who had the principal direction in these affairs. It is further to be observed, that the accusers and adverfaries of the Arminians were their judges, and that BOGERMAN, who prefided in this famous fynod, was diftinguished by his peculiar hatred of that feet; that neither the Dutch nor foreign divines had the liberty of giving their fuffrage according to their own private fentiments, but were obliged to deliver the opinions of the princes and magistrates, of whose orders they were the depofitaries [r]; that the influence of the lay deputies, who appeared in the fynod with commissions from the States-general and the prince of Orange, was still superior to that of the ecclesiastical members, who fat as judges; and, lastly, that the solemn promife, made to the Arminians, when they were iummoned before the fynod, that they should be allowed the freedom of explaining and defending their

> [9] This affertion is of too weighty a nature to be advanced without fufficient proof. Our author quotes no authority for it.

[[]r] Here our author has fallen into a palpable mistake. The Dutch divines had no commission but from their respective confistories, or subordinate ecclesiastical assemblies; nor are they ever depositaries of the orders of their magistrates, who have lay-deputies to reprefent them both in provincial and national fynods. As to the English and other foreign doctors that appeared in the fynod of Dort, the case perhaps may have been fomewhat different.

opinions, as far as they thought proper, or necessary CENT. to their justification, was manifestly violated [t].

VIII. The Arminians, in confequence of the PART II. decision of the fynod, were considered as enemies The fare of of their country and of its established religion; the Arminiand they were accordingly treated with great fe- aus after the fended of verity. They were deprived of all their posts and Dort. employments, whether ecclefiaftical or civil; and, which they looked upon as a yet more intolerable inflance of the rigour of their adversaries, their ministers were filenced, and their congregations were suppressed. They refused obedience to the order, by which their pastors were prohibited from performing, in public, their ministerial functions; and thus drew upon themselves anew the refentment of their fuperiors, who punished them by fines, imprifonment, exile, and other marks of ignominy. To avoid these vexations, many of them retired to Antwerp, others fled to France; while a confiderable number, accepting the invitation fent to them by FREDERICK, duke of Holstein, formed a colony, which settled in the dominions of that prince, and built for themfelves a handfome town called Frederickstadt, in the dutchy of Slefwyck, where they still live happy and unmolested, in the open profession and free exercife of their religion. The heads of this colony were perfons of diffinction, who had been obliged to leave their native country on account of these troubles, particularly Adrian Vander WAEL, who was the first governor of the new city [u]. Among the perfecuted ecclefiaftics, who

[11] The history of this colony is accurately related in the famous letters published by PHILIP LIMBORCH and CHRIST-

^[1] See LE VASSOR, Histoire du Regne de Louis XIII. tom. iii. livr. xii. p. 365, 366.—and Mosheim's Preface to the Latin translation of Hale's account of the fynod of Dort, p. 394-400.

CENT. λVII. SECT. 17.

who followed this colony, were, the famous Vorstius, who, by his religious fentiments, which PART II. differed but little from the Socinian fystem, had rendered the Arminians particularly odious, GRE-VINCKHOVIUS, a man of a resolute spirit, who had been pastor at Rotterdam, Goulart, Grevius, WALTERS, NARSIUS, and others [w].

They are recalled from exile.

IX. After the death of Prince MAURICE, which happened in the year 1625, the Arminian exiles experienced the mildness and clemency of his brother and fuccessor FREDERIC HENRY, under whose administration they were recalled from banishment, and restored to their former reputation and tranquillity. Those who had taken refuge in the kingdom of France and in the Spanish Netherlands, were the first that embraced this occafion of returning to their native country, where they erected churches in feveral places, and more particularly in the cities of Amsterdam and Rotterdam, under the mild shade of a religious toleration. That they might also have a public seminary of learning for the instruction of their youth, and the propagation of their theological principles, they founded a college at Amsterdam, in which two professors were appointed to instruct the candidates for the ministry, in the various branches of literature and fcience, facred and profane. Simon Episcopius was the first professor of theology among the Arminians; and fince his time, the feminary now mentioned has

IAN HARTSOEKER, entitled, Epiftolæ præstantium et eruditorum virorum Ecclefiastica et Theologica, of which the last edition was published in foilo at Amsterdam, in the year 1704 .- See also Jo. Mollert Introductio in Histor. Chersonesi Cimbrica, p. ii. p. 108 .- and Pontoppidani Annales Ecclefiæ Danicæ Diplomatici, tom. iii. p. 714.

[w] For an ample account of Vorstius, fee [o. Mol-LERI Cimbria Literata, tom. ii. p. 931. as also p. 242. 247. 249. 255. 576. where we find a particular account of the other ecclefiaftics above mentioned.

been, generally speaking, furnished with pro- CENT. feffors eminent for their learning and genius, fuch SECT. II. as Courcelles, Poelenburg, Limborch, Le Partil. Clerc, Cattenburgh [x], and Wetstein.

X. We have already feen, that the original The ancient difference between the Arminians and the Calfyelm of vinists was entirely confined to the five points Arminianmentioned above, relative to the doctrines of im. Predestination and Grace; and it was the doctrine of the former concerning these points alone that occasioned their condemnation in the synod of Dort. It is further to be observed, that these five points, as explained at that time by the Arminians, feemed to differ very little from the Lutheran fystem. But after the fynod of Dort, and more especially after the return of the Arminian exiles into their native country, the theological fystem of this community underwent a remarkable change, and affumed an afpect, that distinguished it entirely from that of all other Christian churches. For then they gave a new explication of these five articles, that made them almost coincide with the doctrine of those who deny the necessity of divine succours in the work of conversion and in the paths of virtue. Nay, they went still further, and, bringing the greatest part of the doctrines of Christianity before the tribunal of reason, they modified them considerably, and reduced them to an excessive degree of simplicity. Arminius, the parent and founder of the community, was, undoubtedly, the inventor of this new form of doctrine, and taught it to his disciples [y]; but it was first digested into a regular [[]x] There is an accurate account of these and the other Arminian writers given by ADRIAN VAN CATTENEURGH, in his Bibliotheca Scriptorum Remonstrantium, printed in 8vo at Amflerdam, in the year 1728.

[[]y] It is a common opinion that the ancient Arminians, who flourished before the synod of Dort, were much more

CENT. gular fystem, and embellished with the charms XVII. of a masculine eloquence, by Episcopius, whose Part II. learning and genius have given him a place among the Arminian doctors, next to their founder [z].

XI. The

found in their opinions, and strict in their morals, than those who have lived after this period; that ARMINIUS himself only rejected the Calvinitical doctrine of absolute decrees, and what he took to be its immediate confequences, adopting in all other points the doctrines received in the Reformed churches; but that his disciples, and more especially Episcopius, had boldly transgressed the bounds that had been wisely prescribed by their mafter, and had gone over to the Pelagians, and even to the Socinians. Such, I fay, is the opinion commonly entertained concerning this matter. But it appears, on the contrary, evident to me, that ARMINIUS himself had laid the plan of that theological fystem, that was, in after-times, embraced by his followers, and that he had instilled the main principles of it into the minds of his disciples; and that these latter, and particularly Episcopius, did really no more than bring this plan to a greater degree of perfection, and propagate, with more courage and perspicuity, the doctrines it contained. I have the tellimony of Arminius to support this notion, befides many others that might be alleged in its behalf; for, in the left will made by this eminent man, a little before his death, he plainly and politively declares, that the great object he had in view, in all his theological and ministerial labours, was to unite in one community, cemented by the bonds of fraternal charity, all fects and denominations of Christians, the papills excepted; his words, as they are recorded in the funerai oration, which was composed on occasion of his death by BERTIUS, are as follow: Ea proposui et docui quæ ad propagationem amplificationemque verstatis religionis Christiana, veri Dei cultus, communis pietatis, et sanstæ inter bomines conversationis, denique ad CONVENIENTEM CHRISTIANO NOMINE TRANQUILLITATEM ET PACEM juxta verbum Dei Possent CONFERRE, EXCLUDENS EX 115 PAPATUM, cum quo nulla unitas fidei, nullum pietatis aut Christiana pacis vinculum servari potest. These words, in their amount, coincide perfectly with the modern system of Arminianism, which extends the limits of the Christian church, and relaxes the bonds of fraternal communion in fuch a manner, that Christians of all feets and all denominations, whatever their fentiments and opinions may be (papifts excepted), may be formed into one religious body, and live together in brotherly love and concord.

[2] The life of this eminent man was composed in Latin by the learned and judicious Limborcii, and is fingularly

worthy

XI. The great and ultimate end the Arminians CENT. feem to have in view, is, that Christians, though SECT. II. divided in their opinions, may be united in fra- PART II. ternal charity and love, and thus be formed into The great one family or community, notwithstanding the end proposed diversity of their theological fentiments. In or- by the Armider to execute their benevolent purpose, they and its prinmaintain, that CHRIST demands from his fervants more virtue than faith; that he has confined that belief which is effential to falvation to a few articles; that, on the other hand, the rules of practice he has prefcribed are extremely large in their extent; and that charity and virtue ought to be the principal study of true Christians. Their definition of a true Christian is somewhat latitudinarian in point of belief. According to their account of things, every person is a genuine subject of the kingdom of CHRIST, "I. Who re-" ceives the holy Scriptures, and more especially "the New Testament, as the rule of his faith, " however he may think proper to interpret and " explain these facred oracles; 2. Who abstains " from idolatry and polytheifm, with all their " concomitant absurdities; 3. Who leads a de-" cent, honest, and virtuous life, directed and " regulated by the laws of God; and, 4. Who never discovers a spirit of persecution, discord, " or ill-will towards those who differ from him in " their religious fentiments, or, in their manner " of interpreting the holy Scriptures." Thus the wide bosom of the Arminian church is opened to all who profess themselves Christians, however effentially they may differ from each other in their theological opinions. The papifts alone are ex-

by the Armicipal heads.

worthy of an attentive perufal. It was published at Amsterdam in 3vo in the year 1701.

cluded from this extensive communion, and this

CENT. XVII. SECT. II.

because they esteem it lawful [a] to persecute those who will not submit to the yoke of the Ro-PART II. man pontif [b]. It is not our defign here either to justify or condemn these latitudinarian terms of communion; it is true, indeed, that, if other Christian churches adopted them, diversity fentiments would be no longer an obstacle to mutual love and concord.

> [a] It is not only on account of their perfecuting spirit, but also on account of their idolatrous worthin, that the Arminians exclude the rapifts from their communion.

following note.

[b] For a full and accurate representation of this matter, the reader need scarcely have recourse to any other treatise than that which is published in the first volume of the works of Episcopius (p. 508.), ander the following title: Verus Theologus Remonstrans, sive veræ Remonstrantium Theologiæ de errantibus dilucida declaratio. This treatife is written with precision and perspicuity. LE CLERC, in the Dedication prefixed to his Latin translation of Dr. HAMMOND's Paraphrase and Commentary on the New Tejiament, gives a brief account of the Arminian principles and terms of communion in the following words, addressed to the learned men of that sect: You declare, fays he, that they ONLY are excluded from your communion, who are chargeable with idolatry—who do not receive the holy Scriptures as the rule of faith-who trample upon the precepts of CHRIST by their licentious manners and actions—and who perfecute those who differ from them in matters of religion *. Many writers affirm, that the Arminians acknowledge as their brethren all those who receive that form of doctrine that is known under the denomination of the Apostles Creed. But that these writers are mistaken, appears sufficiently from what has been already faid on this subject; and is further confirmed by the express testimony of LE CLERC, who (in his Biblioth. Ancienne et Mod. tom. xxv. p. 110.) declares, that it is not true that the Arminians admit to their communion all those who receive the Apostles Greed; his words are, Ils se trompent; ils (the Arminians) offreat la communion à tous ceux, qui reçoivent l'ecriture suinte comme la seule regle de la soi et des mœurs, et qui ne sont ni idolatres ni perfecuteurs.

^{*} The original word of LF CLERC are, Profiteri fortis . . . eos duntaxat a vobis excludi, qui (1) idelatoria funt contaminati, (2) qui minime habent scripturam pro f. i - n ma (3) ; ur impues moribus sancta Christi præcepta conculcant, (4) aut qui denique alies religionis cauja vexant.

XII. From all this it appears plain enough, CEN τ. that the Arminian community was a kind of medley, composed of persons of different principles, and that, properly speaking, it could have no fixed and stable form or system of doctrine. The mian Con-Arminians, however, foreseeing that this circumstance might be objected to them as a matter of reproach, and unwilling to pass for a society connected by no common principles or bond of union, have adopted, as their Confession of Faith, a kind of theological system, drawn up by Epis-COPIUS, and expressed, for the most part, in the words and phrases of holy Scripture [c]. But as none of their pastors are obliged, either by oath, declaration, or tacit compact, to adhere strictly to this confession, and as, on the contrary, by the fundamental conflitution of this community, every one is authorized to interpret its expressions (which are in effect susceptible of various significations) in a manner conformable to their peculiar fentiments; it evidently follows, that we cannot deduce from thence an accurate and confiftent view of Arminianism, or know, with any degree of certainty, what doctrines are adopted or rejected by this fect. Hence it happens, that the Arminian doctors differ widely among themselves concerning some of the most important doctrines of Christianity $\lceil d \rceil$; nor are they universally agreed or entirely uniform in their fentiments of almost any one point, if we except the doctrines of Pre-

fession of

[c] This Confession of Faith is extant in Latin, Dutch, and German. The Latin edition of it is to be found in the works of Episcopius, tom. ii. p. ii. p. 69-Where may be found also a Defence of this Confession against the objection of the profesiors of divinity at Leyden.

[d] They who will be at the pains of comparing together the theological writings of Episcopius, Courcelles, Lim-BORCH, LE CLERC, and CATTENBURGH, will fee clearly the diverfity of fentiments that reigns among the Arminian doctors.

SECT. 11.

CENT. destination and Grace. They all, indeed, unanimously adhere to the doctrine that excluded PART II. their ancestors from the communion of the Reformed churches, even that the love of God extends itself equally to all markind; that no mortal is rendered finally unhappy by an eternal and invincible decree; and that the misery of those that perish comes from themselves; but they explain this doctrine in a very different manner from that in which it was formerly understood. Be that as it may, this is the fundamental doctrine of the Arminians, and whoever oppofes it, becomes thereby an adverfary to the whole community; whereas those, whose objections are levelled at particular tenets which are found in the writings of the Arminian divines, cannot be faid, with any degree of propriety, to attack or cenfure the Arminian church, whose theological system, a few articles excepted, is vague and uncertain [e], and is not characterized by any fixed fet of doctrines and principles. Such only attack certain doctors of that communion, who are divided among themselves, and do not agree, even in their explications of the doctrine relating to the extent of the divine love and mercy; though this be the fundamental point that occasioned their separation from the Reformed churches.

The present flate of Arminianism.

XIII. The Arminian church makes at prefent but an inconfiderable figure, when compared with the Reformed; and, if credit may be given to public report, it declines from day to day. The ^{⟨ [}e] What renders the Arminian Confession of Faith an uncertain reprefentation of the fentiments of the community, is, the liberty in which every pastor is indulged of departing from it, when he finds any of its doctrines in contradiction with his private opinions. See the Introduction to the Arminian Confession of Faith, in the third volume of the French abridgment of BRANDT's History of the Reformation of the Netherlands.

Arminians have still in the United Provinces thirty- CENT. four congregations, more or less numerous, which $S_{\text{S.c.t.}}^{\text{XVII.}}$ are furnished with eighty-four pastors; besides $P_{\text{A.R.T.}}^{\text{II.}}$ these, their church at Frederickstadt, in the dutchy of Holstein, still subsists. It cannot however be faid, that the credit and influence of their religious principles have declined with the external Justre of their community; since it is well known, that their fentiments were early adopted in feveral countries, and were fecretly received by many who had not the courage to profess them openly. Every one is acquainted with the change that has taken place in the established church of England, whose clergy, generally speaking, since the time of Archbishop Laud, have embraced the Arminian doctrine concerning Predeftination and Grace; and, fince the restoration of CHARLES II., have discovered a strong propensity to many other tenets of the Arminian church. Besides this, whoever has any acquaintance with the world, must know, that, in many of the courts of Protestant princes, and, generally speaking, among those persons that pretend to be wifer than the multitude, the following fundamental principle of Arminianism is adopted: "That those "doctrines, whose belief is necessary to salvation, " are very few in number; and that every one is to " be left at full liberty, with respect to his private " fentiments of God and religion, provided his " life and actions be conformable to the rules of " piety and virtue." Even the United Provinces, which faw within their bosom the defeat of Arminianism, are at this time sensible of a considerable change in that respect; for while the patrons of Calvinism in that republic acknowledge, that the community, which makes an external profession of Arminianism, declines gradually both in its numbers and influence, they, at the fame time, complain, that its doctrines and spirit gain ground from from day to day; that they have even infinuated themselves more or less into the bosom of the SECT. II. established church, and insected the theological fystem of many of those very pastors who are appointed to maintain the doctrine and authority of the fynod of Dort. The progress of Arminianism in other countries is abundantly known; and its votaries in France, Geneva, and many parts of Switzerland, are certainly very numerous [ee].

CENT. XVII.

[ee] It may not however be improper to observe here, that the progress of Arminianism has been greatly retarded, nay, that its cause daily declines in Germany and several parts of Switzerland, in consequence of the ascendant which the Leibnitian and Wolfian philosophy hath gained in these countries, and particularly among the clergy and men of learning. LEIBNITZ and WOLF, by attacking that liberty of indifference, which is supposed to imply the power of acting not only without, but against motives, struck at the very foundation of the Arminian fystem. But this was not all: for, by considering that multiplicity of worlds that compose the universe, as one System or Whole, whose greatest possible perfection is the ULTI-MATE END of creating goodness, and the sovereign purpose of governing wisdom, they removed from the doctrine of Predestination those arbitrary procedures and narrow views, with which the Calvinists are supposed to have loaded it, and gave it a new, a more pleasing, and a more philosophical aspect. As the Leibnitians laid down this great END, as the supreme object of God's univerfal dominion, and the scope to which all his dispensations are directed, so they concluded, that, if this end was proposed, it must be accomplished. Hence the doctrine of necessity, to fulfil the purposes of a Predestination founded in wisdom and goodness: a necessity, physical and mechanical in the motions of material and inanimate things, but a necessity, moral and spiritual in the voluntary determinations of intelligent beings, in confequence of prepollent motives, which produce their effects with certainty, though these effects be contingent, and by no means the offspring of an absolute and esfentially immutable fatality. These principles are evidently applicable to the main doctrines of Calvinism; by them Predestination is confirmed, though modified with respect to its reasons and its ends; by them Irresistible Grace (irresistible in a moral fense) is maintained upon the hypothesis of prepollent motives and a moral necessity. The perseverance of the Saints is also explicable upon the same system, by a series of moral causes producing a series of moral effects. In consequence of

The external forms of divine worship and CENT. ecclesiaftical government in the Arminian church are almost the same with those that are in use PART 11. among the Presbyterians. As, however, the leading men among the Arminians are peculiarly ambitious of maintaining their correspondence and fraternal intercourse with the church of England, and leave no circumstance unimproved that may tend to confirm this union; so they discover, upon all occasions, their approbation of the episcopal form of ecclesiastical government, and profess to regard it as most ancient, as truly sacred, and as superior to all other institutions of church-polity $\lceil f \rceil$.

CHAP.

of all this, feveral divines of the German church have applied the Leibnitian and Wolfian philosophy to the illustration of the doctrines of Christianity; and the learned CANZIUS has written a book expressly to shew the eminent use that may be made of that philosophy in throwing light upon the chief articles of our faith. See his Philosophiæ Leibnitianæ & Wolfianæ Usus in Theologia per præcipua fidei capita, auctore ISRAEL. THEOFH. CANZIO, and of which a fecond edition was published at Francfort and Leipsic, in 1749. See also WITTENBACH's Tentamen Theologia Dogmatica Methodo Scientifica pertractata, which was published in three vols. 8vo. at Francfort, in 1747. See above all, the famous work of LEIBNITZ, entitled, Effais de Theodicée, sur la Bonté de Dieu, la Liberte de l'homme, & Porigine du mal.-It is remarkable enough, that the Leibnitian fythem has been embraced by very few, fcarcely by any, of the English Calvinists. Can this be owing to a want of inclination towards philosophical discussions? This cannot be faid. The scheme of necessity and of partial evil's tending to univerfal good, has, indeed, been fostered in some parts of Great Britain, and even has turned fome zealous Arminians into moderate and philosophical Calvinists. But the zealous Calvinists have, for the most part, held firm to their theology, and blended no philosophical principles with their system; and it is certain, that the most eminent philosophers have been found, generally fpeaking, among the Arminians. If both Calvinists and Arminians claim a KING, it is certain that the latter alone can boast of a Newton, a Locke, a CLARKE.

[f] Hence, to omit many other circumstances that shew unquestionably the truth of this observation, the Arminians Vol. V. H h

CENT. XVII. Sect. II. Part II.

CHAPTER IV.

The HISTORY of the Sett called QUAKERS.

The rife of the Quakers, George Fox,

THE fect of QUAKERS received this denomination, in the year 1650, from GERVAS BENNET, Efq; a justice of peace in Derbyshire [g], partly on account of the convulsive agitations and shakings of the body with which their discourses to the people were usually attended, and partly on account of the exhortation addressed to this magiftrate by Fox and his companions, who, when they were called before him, defired him, with a loud voice and a vehement emotion of body, to tremble at the word of the Lord. However farcaftical this appellation may be, when confidered in its origin, the members of this fect are willing to adopt it, provided it be rightly understood; they prefer, nevertheless, to be called, in allusion to that doctrine that is the fundamental principle of their affociation, Children, or Confessors of Light. In their conversation and intercourse with each other, they use no other term of appellation than that of Friend [b].

This fect had its rife in England, in those unhappy times of confusion, anarchy, and civil discord, when every political or religious fanatic, that had formed new plans of government, or invented new systems of theology, came forth with his novelties to public view, and propagated them with impunity among a fickle and unthinking have been at great pains to represent GROTIUS, their hero and their oracle, as a particular admirer of the constitution and government of the church of England, which he preferred before all other forms of ecclesiastical polity. See what Le Clerc has published on this subject at the end of the edition of GROTIUS'S book, De Veritate Religionis Christianæ, which he gave at the Hague in the year 1724, p. 376.

[g] See GEORGE SEWEL's Hiftory of the Quakers, p. 23.— NEAL's Hiftory of the Puritans, vol. iv. p. 32.

[b] SEWEL, Icc. cit. p. 624.

multitude.

multitude. Its parent and founder was George Cent. Fox [i], a shoemaker, of a dark and melancholy complexion, and of a visionary and enthusiastic turn of mind. About the year 1647, which was the twenty-third year of his age, he began to ftroll through feveral counties in England, giving himself out for a person divinely inspired, and ex-

SECT. II. PART II.

[i] The anonymous writer of A Letter to Dr. Formey, F. R. S. published by NICOL, seems much offended at Mr. FORMEY on account of his calling GEORGE Fox a man of a turbulent spirit, &c. He tells us, on the contrary, that, from all the information worthy of credit which he was able to procure, it appears, that Fox "was a man of fo meek, con-"tented, easy, steady, and tender a disposition, that it was a " pleasure to be in his company,-that he exercised no autho-" rity but over evil, and that every where and in all, but with " love, compassion, and long suffering." This account he takes from PENN; and it is very probable that he has looked no farther, unless it be to the curious portrait which THOMAS ELLWOOD, another Quaker, has given of Fox, a portrait in which there is fuch an affected jingle of words, as shews the author to have been more attentive to the arrangement of his fentences, than to a true exhibition of the character of his original: for we are told by Ellwood, that this same George Fox was deep in divine knowledge, powerful in preaching, fervent in prayer, quick in discerning, found in judgment (rifum teneatis, amici), - manly in personage, grave in gesture, contreous in conversation, weighty in communication, &c. &c. After having thus painted George after the fancy of his two brethren (for fancy is the Quaker's fountain of light and truth), the letter writer observes, that Dr. FORMEY has taken his account of George's turbulence and fanaticism from Mosheim's Ecclefiaftical History. As Mosheim then is dead, and cannot defend himself, may I be permitted to beg of this Anonymous Letter-writer, who appears to be a candid and rational man, to cast an eye upon Sewel's History of the Quakers, and to follow this meek, courteous, and modest GEORGE, running like a wild man through feveral counties, refuting homage to his fovereign, interrupting the ministers in the public celebration of divine service at Nottingham, Mansfield, and Market Bofworth? It is remarkable, that the very learned and worthy Dr. HENRY MORE, who was not himfelf without a ftrong tincture of enthufiasm, and who looked upon Penn as a picus Christian, treated nevertheless George Fox as a melancholy fanatic, and as one possessed with the Devil. See his Myst. of Godlings, B. x. ch. 13. As also Schol. in Dialogue, v. § 5. Hh_2 horting the people to attend to the voice of the divine word, that lies hid in the hearts of all men. After the execution of CHARLES I., when all laws both civil and ecclefiaftical feemed to be entirely fuspended, if not extinct, Fox exerted his fanatical powers with new vigour, and formed more ambitious and extensive views. Having acquired a confiderable number of disciples of both sexes, who were ftrongly infected with his wild enthufiafin, he excited great tumults in feveral parts of England; and, in the year 1650, went so far as to disturb the devotion of those that were assembled in the churches for the purposes of public worship, declaring, that all fuch affemblies were useless and unchristian. For these extravagances, both he and his companions were frequently cast into prison, and chastised, as disturbers of the peace, by the civil magistrate $\lceil k \rceil$.

II. The

[k] Befides the ordinary writers of the ecclefiaftical history of this century, the curious reader will do well to confult CROESII Historia Quakeriana, Tribus Libris comprehensa, the fecond edition of which was published in 8vo at Amsterdam, in the year 1703. A physician named Kolhansius, who was born a Lutheran, but turned Quaker, published critical remarks upon this history, under the title of Dilucidationes, which were first printed at Amsterdam, in the year 1696. And it must be acknowledged, that there are many inaccuracies in the history of CROESIUS; it is, however, much less faulty than another history of this fect, which was published at Colegn in 12mo, in the year 1692, under the following title: Histoire abregsé de la naissance et du progres du Konakerisme avec celle de fes dogmes; for the anonymous author of this latter history, instead of relating well attested facts, has compiled, without either differnment or choice, fuch an extravagant medley of truth and falsehood, as is rather adapted to excite laughter than to administer instruction. See the second book of CROE-SIUS's Hilloria Quakeriana, p. 322. and 376. as also LE CLERC, Biblioth. Univerfelle et Historique, tom. xxii. p. 53 .-The most ample and authentic account of this feet is that which was composed by George Sewel, from a great variety of genuine records, and partly from the papers of Fox, its founder, and published under the following title: The History of the Christian people called Quakers. This work is remarkable both

II. The first association of Quakers was com- CENT. posed mostly of visionary fanatics, and of persons SECT II. that really seemed to be disordered in their brains; LART IL. and hence they committed many enormities, which T e first the modern Quakers endeavour to alleviate and at motes of diminish, but which they neither pretend to justify the ect nor to approve. For the greatest part of them Cromwell. were riotous and tumultuous in the highest degree; and even their female disciples, forgetting the delicacy and decency peculiar to their fex, bore their part in these disorders. They ran, like Bacchanals, through the towns and villages; declaiming against Episcopacy, Presbyterianism, and every fixed form of religion; railed at public and stated worship; affronted and mocked the clergy, even in the very exercise of their ministerial both for the industry and accuracy which the author has difcovered in compiling it. But as SEWEL was himself a Quaker, fo he is fometimes chargeable with concealing, diminishing, or reprefenting under artful colours, many things, which, if impartially related, must have appeared dishonourable, and might have proved detrimental, to his community. It must however be granted, that, notwithstanding these desects, SEWEL's hiftory is abundantly fufficient to enable an impartial and intelligent reader to form a just and fatisfactory idea of this visionary fect. VOLTAIRE has also entertained the public with Four Letters, concerning the Religion, Manners, and History of the Quakers, in his Melanges de Litterature d'Histoire et de Philosophie, which are written with his usual wit and elegance, but are rather adapted to amuse than instruct. The convertation between him and ANDREW PITT, an eminent Quaker in London, which is related in these Leiters, may be true in general; but to render the account of it still more pleasing, the ingenious writer has embellished it with effufions of wit and fancy, and even added fome particulars, that are rather drawn from imagination than memory. It is from the books already mentioned, that the French Differtation on the Religion of the Quakers (which is placed in the third vo-lume of the splendid work, entitled, Geremonies et Coutumes Religiouses de tout les Peuples), is chiefly compiled, though with less attention and accuracy than might have been expected .-A Lutheran writer, named FREDERIC ERNEST MEIS, has given an account of the English Quakers in a German work, entitled, Entwurff der Kirchen-Granung and Gebräuche der Quäcker in Engeland. Hh_3

functions:

CENT XVII. Sect. II. PART II. functions [kk]; trampled upon the laws and upon the authority of the magistrates, under the pretext of being actuated by a divine impulse; and made use of their pretended inspiration to

[[kk] A female, contrary to the modesty of her sex, came into Whitehall Chapel flark naked, in the midth of public worthip, when CROMWELL was there prefent. Another came into the Parliament-house with a trenchard in her hand, which she broke in pieces, faying, Thus thall be be broke in pieces. THO-MAS ADAMS, having complained to the protector of the imprisonment of some of his friends, and not finding redress, he took off his cap and tore it in pieces, faying, So shall thy government be torn from thee and thy house. Several, pretending an extraordinary message from heaven, went about the streets, denouncing the judgments of God against the Protector and his council; and one came to the door of the Parliament-house with a drawn fword, and wounded feveral, faving, He was inspired by the Holy Spirit to kill every man that sat in that house. The most extravagant Quaker that appeared in this time, was JAMES NAYLOR, formerly an officer, a man of parts, and so much admired by these fanatics, that they blasphemously thyled him, The everlasting fon of righteousness; the prince of peace; the only begotten fon of God; the fairest among ten thoufand. See NEAL's Hiftory of the Puritans; -The Life and Trial of NAYLOR, p. 6, 7, &c. The anonymous author of the Letter to Dr. Formey, F. R. S. feems to have lost fight of the state of Quakerism in the time of Fox, when he denies that the charge of turbulence and fanaticism can be proved against him or his friends, and gives the gentle denomination of imprudence to the extravagancies exhibited by the Quakers under CHARLES I., and the Commonwealth. The fingle flory of NAYLOR, who was the convert and pupil of Fox, the letters, full of blasphemous absurdity, written to this Rose of Sharon, this new Jefus, by HANNAH STRANGER, RICHARD FAIR-MAN, and others, shew the horrid vein of fanaticism that ran through this visionary fect. See these Letters in the Life and Triel of NAYLOR, who, though cruelly scourged, was, however, whipped into his fenses, or, at least, brought by his fufferings into a calmer state of mind. See also Satan Inthroned, &c. p. 4 and 5. If Quakerism be now in England on a more rational footing, we may congratulate its members upon the happy change, but at the fame time condole with them on the approaching annihilation of their fect; for if reason gets in among them, the fpirit (I mean their spirit) will soon be quenched, and fancy being no more the only criterion of truth, the fundamental principle of their existence will be destroyed. In such a catastrophe, the abettors of ancient Quakerism will find some resource among the Methodists. excite excite the most vehement commotions both in state C E N T. and church. Hence it is not at all furprifing, SECT. II. that the fecular arm was at length raifed against PART II. these pernicious fanatics, and that many of them were severely chastissed for their extravagance and folly [1]. Cromwell himself, who was, generally fpeaking, an enemy to no fect, however enthusiaftical it might be, entertained uneasy apprehensions from the frantic violence of the Quakers, and therefore, in his first thoughts, formed a resolution to suppress their rising community. But when he perceived that they treated with contempt both his promises and threatenings, and were, in effect, too powerful or too headstrong to yield to either, he prudently abstained from the use of force, and contented himself with employing wife measures and pre-cautions to prevent their fomenting sedition among the people, or undermining the foundations of his new fovereignty [m].

III. In process of time, the fumes of this The pro-excessive fanaticism began to evaporate, and feet under the ardent impetuolity of the riling fect feemed Charles II. gradually to fubfide; nor did the divine light, of James II. which the Quakers boaft, produce fuch tumults in church and state, as at the first declaration of their celestial pretensions. Under the reign of CHARLES II., both their religious doctrine and discipline assumed a more regular and permanent form, by the care and industry of Fox, affisted, in this very necessary undertaking, by Robert BAR-CLAY, GEORGE KEITH, and SAMUEL FISHER, men of learning and abilities, who became, notwith-

[1] NEAL's History of the Puritans, vol. iv. p. 153 .- SEWEL's History, &c. passim.

[[]m] CLARENDON tells us, in his History of the Rebellion, that the Quakers always persevered in their bitter enmity against CROMWELL. See Sewel's History, book i. p. 91. 113. 148, 149.

flanding, members of this strange community. Fox flood in urgent need of fuch able affiftants: for his groß ignorance had rendered his religion, hitherto, a confused medley of incoherent tenets and visions. The new triumvirate, therefore, used their utmost endeavours to digest these under certain heads, and to reduce them to a fort of theological fystem [n]. But such was the change of times, that the wifer and more moderate Quakers in England fuffered more vexations, and were involved in greater calamities, than had fallen to the lot of their frantic and turbulent ancestors. These vexations, indeed, were not so much the confequence of their religious principles, as of their fingular customs and manners in civil life. For they would never give to magistrates those titles of honour and pre-eminence that are defigned to mark the respect due to their authority; they also refused obstinately to take the oath of allegiance to their fovereign [0], and to pay tithes to the clergy; hence they were looked upon as rebellious subjects, and, on that account, were frequently punified with great feverity [2]. Under the reign of JAMES II., and more particularly about the year 1685, they began to fee

[n] For an account of the life and writings of BARCLAY, fee the General Distionary.—Sewel, in his History of the Qua-kers, gives an ample account of Keith. There is also particular mention made of FISHER, in a German work, intitled, Unschuldige Nachricht, 1750, p. 338.

[0] This refusal to take the oath of allegiance did not proceed from any difaffection to the government, but from a perfuation that all oaths were unlawful, and that fivearing, even upon the most folemn occasions, was forbidden in the New Teftament. They also fincerely believed, that they were as much obliged to obedience by an affirmation, which they were willing to make, as by an oath.

[p] See a circumstantial account of their fufferings under CHARLES II., in NEAL's History of the Puritans, vol. iv. p. 313. 353. 396. 432. 510. 518. 552. 569.—BURNET's Hiftory of his own Times, vol. i. p. 271 .- SEWEL, loc. cit. passim.

PART II.

more prosperous days, and to enjoy the sweets of CENT. toleration and liberty, which they owed not to the clemency of the government, but to the friendship of that monarch for the famous WIL-LIAM PENN [q], who had been employed by him in matters of the utmost moment, and had rendered him fignal and important fervices $\lceil r \rceil$. What JAMES had done, from motives of a perfonal or political nature, in favour of the Quakers, King WILLIAM III. confirmed and continued, from a zeal for maintaining the rights of confcience, and advancing the cause of religious liberty. From these motives, he procured a full and ample teleration for diffenters of almost all denominations; and the Quakers, in consequence of this grant, [9] See Sewel's History of the Quakers.

[r] The indulgence of James II. towards the Quakers, and other diffenters from the established church, was, at bottom, founded on a zeal for popery, and defigned to favour the Roman Catholics. More particularly the order he fent to the Lord Mayor of London, the 7th of November 1687, to dispense with the Quakers not swearing, was evidently designed to open a door to the Roman Catholics to bear offices in the flate without a legal qualification .- At the fame time it was probable enough, that a perfonal attachment to the famous WILLIAM PENN may have contributed to render this nonarch more indulgent to this feet than he would otherwise have been. The reasons of this attachment are differently represented. Some suppose it to have been owing to the fervices of his father in the fleet commanded against the Durch, in the year 1665, by King JAMES, when Duke of Tork. Others attribute this attachment to his personal services. From the high degree of favour he enjoyed at court, they conclude that he was a concealed papift, and affifted the king in the execution of his defigns. That the imputation of popery was groundless, appears from his correspondence with Dr. TILLOTSON, which is published in the Life of PENN, that is prefixed to the first volume of the works of the latter. It is nevertheless certain, that he was very intimate with Father PETERS, the hot-headed Jefuit, whose bigotry formed the king's projects, and whose imprudence rendered them abortive. It is also certain, that, in the year 1686, he went over to Holland, in order to perfuade the prince of Orange to come into King JAMES's meafures.

enjoyed

XVII. SECT. II.

PART II. The propazation of Quakeriim

out of Eng-

enjoyed at length, upon a conflitutional footing, CENT. tranquillity and freedom [s].

IV. Fatigued with the vexations and persecution which they fuffered in their native country during the reign of CHARLES II., the Quakers looked about for fome diffant fettlements, where they might shelter themselves from the storm; and with this view began to disseminate their religious principles in various countries. Attempts of this nature were made in Germany, Prussia, France, Italy, Greece, Holland, and Holstein, but with little fuccess. The Dutch, however, were, after much importunity, perfuaded to allow a certain number of these enthusiasts to settle in Holland, where they still continue to reside. Multitudes of them also went over to America, and formed fettlements there not long after the first rise of their sect; and it afterwards happened, by a fingular concourse of events, that this new world became the chief feat of their prosperity and freedom. WILLIAM PENN, fon of the famous vice-admiral of that name, who embraced Quakerism in the year 1668, received, in the year 1680, from CHARLES II., and from the English parliament, the grant of an ample, fertile, but uncultivated province in America, as a reward for the eminent fervices of his father. This illustrious Quaker, who was far from being destitute of parts, and whose activity and penetration were accompanied with an uncommon degree of eloquence [t], carried over with him into his new dominions a confiderable colony of his Friends

[[]t] Oeuvres de M. de Voltaire, tom. iv. p. 182. [t] Bishop BURNET, who knew PENN personally, says, that "he was a talking vain man, who had fuch a high opi-" nion of his own eloquence, that he thought nothing could " stand before it; and that he had a tedious luscious way, that "was not apt to overcome a man's reason, though it might and Brethren; and he founded in those distant CENT. regions a republic, whose form, laws, and infti- XVII. tutions, refembled no other known fystem of go- PART II. vernment, whose pacific principles and commer-cial ipirit have long blessed it with tranquillity and opulence, and which still continues in a prosperous and flourishing state [u]. The Quakers predominate in this colony, both by their influence and their numbers; but all those who acknowledge the existence and providence of one Supreme Being, and shew their respect to that Being, either by external worship, or at least by the regularity of their lives and actions, are admitted to the rights and privileges of citizens in this happy republic. The large province that constitutes its territory was called Pennsylvania, from the name of its proprietor; and its capital city was named Philadelphia, from the spirit of union and fraternal love that reigned at first, and is still supposed to prevail, more or less, among its inhabitants.

[&]quot; tire his patience."

tine difputes and contells Quakers.

V. Even during the life of their founder, the The intef-Quakers, notwithstanding their extraordinary pretensions to fraternal charity and union, were of the frequently divided into parties, and involved in contests and debates. These debates, indeed, which were carried on in the years 1656, 1661, and 1683, with peculiar warmth, were not occafioned by any doctrines of a religious nature, but by a diversity of opinions about matters of difcipline, about certain customs and manners, and other affairs of little moment; and they were ge-

[[]u] The laws and charters of the colony of Pennfylvania may be feen in RAPIN'S Hiftory, PENN'S Works, and in other collections of public records; they are also inserted in the Bibliotheque Britannique, tom. xv. p. 310. tom. xvi. p. 127 .- PENN acquired a great reputation, both by his writings and the active figure he made in life. See the accounts given of him by Sewel and Burner.

XVII. SECT. II. Parr II.

CENT. nerally terminated in a fhort time, and without much difficulty [w]. But, after the death of Fox, which happened in the year 1691, some Friends, and more especially George Keith, who was by far the most learned member of the community, excited, by their doctrines and innovations, new discords of a much more serious and momentous kind than those which had before divided the Bretbren. This fountain of contention was opened in Pennfylvania, where Keith was charged with erroneous opinions concerning feveral points of theology, and more particularly concerning the Human Nature of CHRIST, which he supposed to be two-fold, the one spiritual and celeftial, the other corporeal and terrestrial [x]. This and other inventions of Keith would perhaps have paffed without cenfure, among a people who reduce the whole of religion to fancy and a kind of spiritual instinct, had not this learned man animadverted, with a certain degree of feverity, upon some of the fantastic notions of the American Brethren, and opposed, in a more particular manner, their method of converting the whole history of Christ's life and fufferings into a mere allegory, or fymbolical representation of the duties of Christianity. The European Quakers dare not fo far prefume upon the indulgence of the civil and ecclefiaftical powers, as to deny openly the reality of the history of the life, mediation, and fufferings of CHRIST; but in America, where they have nothing to fear, they are faid to express themselves without ambiguity, on this fubject, and to maintain publicly, that CHRIST never existed, but in the hearts of the faithful. This point was debated between Keith and his adversaries, in several general assemblies $c \in E \times T$. Of the sect held in England, and was at length brought before the parliament. The contest was terminated in the year 1695, by the excommunication of Keith and his adherents, which so exasperated this samous Quaker[y], that he returned, some years after this, into the bosom of the English church, and died in its communion [z]. His friends and followers continued, for a long time, to hold their assemblies and exercise their religion in a state of separation from the rest of the sect; but now, if we may believe public same, they are reconciled with their Brethren [a].

[w] See Sewel's History of the Quakers.

⁽x [x] Ceremonies et Coutames de tous les Peuples du monde, tom. iv. p. 141 .- CROESII Historia Quakeriana, lib. iii. p. 446.

[y] Bishop Burnet, who was certainly better acquainted with the history of Keith (with whom he had been educated) than Dr. Mosheim, attributes his return to the church of England to a much worthier motive than irritation and resentment. He tells us that Keith, after that the American Quakers had appeared to him as little better than Deite, opposed them so warmly, that they sent him back to England. Here he opened a new meeting, and by a printed summons called together the whole party to convince them of these errors. "He continued these meetings, fays the history, being "still, in outward appearance, a Quaker, for some years, it," having prevailed as far as he saw any appearance of success, "he laid aside their exterior, and was reconciled to the "church." See Burnet's History of his own Times, vel. II. P. 249.

[z] See Burnet, ibid.—Sewel's account of the troubles occasioned by Keith, inhis Hiptory of the Quakers. But Sewel, was either unacquainted with the true nature and slate of this controversy, which, as he was an illiterate min, may well have been the case, or he has given designedly a sale and ambiguous representation of the matter. See the life of Custine, in the Europa Enditu of Rahtlebus*, where this concoversy it, placed in its true light. Kustine was a man of probley, who lived at that time in discrete, and was an eye-witness of these distance.

divisions.

[a] See ROGER's Chriftian Quaker, published in 4to at Leadon, in the year 1699;—as also, The Quakers a Develot 2e /2, published in 1708.—Unfibuldg. Nachright. 1744, p. 496.

^{*} This work is written in German,

CENT. XVII. Sect. II. Part II.

The religion of the Quakers confidered in a general point of view.

VI. The religion of the sect, called Quakers, has an air of novelty that strikes at first fight; but, when viewed closely, it will appear to be nothing more than a certain modification of that famous mystic theology, which arose so early as the fecond century, was fostered and embellished by the luxuriant fancy of ORIGEN, and paffing through various hands, affumed different aspects until it was adopted by the Quakers, who fet off the motely form with new additions of their own invention. Fox, indeed, is not chargeable with these inventions; his ignorant and inelegant simplicity places him beyond the reach of suspicion in this matter; but it is, at the fame time, un-doubtedly certain, that all his doctrine concerning the internal word, and the divine light within, its operations and effects, was either borrowed from the writings of the Mystics, which were, at that time, in the hands of many, or at least picked up from the conversation and expressions of some persons of the Mystic order. The tenets, however, which this blunt and illiterate man expressed in a rude, confused, and ambiguous manner, were dressed up and presented under a different form by the masterly hands of BARCLAY, KEITH, FISHER, and PENN, who digested them with such sagacity and art, that they affumed the aspect of a regular fystem. The Quakers may therefore be deemed with reason the principal branch of the Mystics. as they not only embraced the precepts of their bidden wisdom, but even faw its whole tendency, and adopted, without hesitation, all its consequences [b].

VII. The

[[]b] Most people are of opinion, that we are to learn the true doctrine and sentiments of the Quakers from the Catechism of ROBERT BARCLAY, and more especially from his Apology for the true Christian Divinity, &c. which was published at London in 4to, in the year 1676, and was translated into several foreign

VII. The fundamental doctrine of Quakerism, CENT. from whence all their other tenets are derived, SECT. II.

IS PART II.

reign languages. Nor do I deny, that the members of this The prinfect are very defirous that we should judge of their religious cipal tenet fentiments by the doctrine that is exhibited in these books. Quakers, But if those who are disposed to judge by this rule go so far as to maintain, that these books contain all the religious tenets that have formerly been advanced, or are at prefent adopted by the people called Quakers, they may be refuted, without difficulty, from a great variety of books and records, of unquestionable authenticity. It is necessary to enter into the true spirit of BARCLAY's writings. This ingenious man appeared as a Patron and Defender of Quakerism, and not as a professed teacher or expositor of its various dostrines; and he interpreted and modified the opinions of this fect after the manner of a champion or advocate, who undertakes the defence of an odious cause. How then does he go to work? In the first place, he observes an entire silence in relation to those fundamental principles of Christianity, concerning which it is of great confequence to know the real opinions of the Quakers; and thus he exhibits a system of theology that is evidently lame and imperfect. For it is the peculiar business of a prudent apologist to pass over in silence points that are fcarcely fusceptible of a plausible defence, and to enlarge upon those only which the powers of genius and eloquence may be able to embellish and exhibit in an advantageous point of view. It is observable, in the second place, that BARCLAY touches in a flight, fuperficial, and hally manner, fome tenets, which, when amply explained, had exposed the Quakers to fevere censures; and in this he discovers plainly the weakness of his cause. Lastly, to omit many other observations that might be made here, this writer employs the greatest dexterity and art in foftening and modifying those invidious doctrines which he cannot conceal, and dare not difavow; for which purpose he carefully avoids all those phrases and terms that are made use of by the Quakers, and are peculiar to their sect, and expresses their tenets in ordinary language, in terms of a vague and indefinite nature, and in a stile that casts a fort of malk over their natural aspect. At this rate the most enormous errors may be held with impunity; for there is no doctrine, however abfurd, to which a plaufible air may not be given by following the infidious method of BARCLAY; and it is well known, that even the doctrine of Spinosa was, with a like artifice, dreffed out and difguifed by fome of his difciples. The other writers of this feet have declared their fentiments with more freedom, perspicuity, and candour, particularly the famous WILLIAM PENN and GEORGE WHITEHEAD, whose writings

is that famous and ancient opinion of the Mystic school, "That there lies concealed in the minds of " all men a certain portion of divine reason, a spark " of the same wisdom that exists in the Supreme " Being. Therefore, those who are desirous of ar-" riving at true felicity and eternal falvation, " must, according to their system, by self-con-" verse, contemplation, and perpetual efforts to " fubdue their fenfual affections, endeavour to " draw forth, kindle, and inflame that divine, " bidden spark, which is overpowered by the " darkness of the flesh, and suffocated, as it were, " by that mass of matter with which it is fur-"rounded. They who observe this rule, will a " feel, fay the Quakers, a divine glow of warmth " and light, and hear a celeftial and divine voice " proceeding from the inward recesses of their " fouls; and by this light and this voice they " will be led to all truth, and be perfectly affured " of their union with the Supreme Being." This hidden treasure, which is possessed, though not improved, by all the human race, bears different denominations in the language of this fanatical fect. They frequently call it divine light, fometimes a ray of the eternal wisdom, at others, the beavenly Sophia, whom they suppose married to a mortal, and whose wedding garments some of their writers describe with the most gaudy and writings deserve an attentive perusal preserably to all the other productions of that community. There is, among other writings of these eminent Quakers, one in whose composition they were both concerned, and which was published at London, in the year 1674, under the following title: The Christian Quaker and his Divine Testimony windicated by Scripture, Reason, and Authorizies, egainst the injurious Attempts that have been lately made by Ferris; and the fecond by Whitehead. There is also in Sewell's History, a Consession of Faith, that was published by the Quakers in the year 1693, during their controversy with Return; but this consession is composed with great prudence, and is full of ambiguity.

pompous

pompous eloquence. But the most usual epi- CENT. thets given to this spiritual treasure are those of SECT. II. the internal word, and of CHRIST within; for as, on the one hand, they adopt that doctrine of ORIGEN, and the ancient Mystics, which reprefents CHRIST as the eternal reason, or wisdom of God; and, on the other, maintain, that all men are endowed naturally with a certain portion of the divine wildom; they are thus directly led to affirm, that CHRIST, or the word of God, dwells and speaks in the hearts of all men $\lceil \epsilon \rceil$.

dočtrina,

VIII. All the fingularities and wonderful fan- The tenets cies, that are to be found in the religious fystem that flow from this of the Quakers, are the immediate confequences fundamental of the fundamental principle now mentioned. For fince Christ refides in the inward frame of every mortal; it follows, "First, That the whole " of religion confifts in calling off the mind from " external objects, in weakening the influence and afcendant of the outward fenses, and in "every one's entering deeply into the inmost recesses of his heart, and listening attentively " to the divine instructions and commands that " the internal word or CHRIST within delivers " there; secondly, That the external word, i. e. the " holy Scripture, neither points out the way of " falvation, nor leads men to it; fince it only consists of letters and words, which, being void " of life, have not a degree of efficacy and power " fufficient to illuminate the human mind, and to " unite it to God. The only advantage that, in "their opinion, refults from a perufal of the " holy Scriptures, is, that they excite the mind

[[]c] It is nevertheless to be observed, that the modern Quakers, as appears from the writings of MARTYN and others, are, generally speaking, ignorant of the system of their ancestors, and perpetually confound the innate divine light abovementioned, with the operations of the Holy Ghost in the minds of the faithful.

" to liften to the dictates of the internal word, " and to go to the school of Christ, who teaches " within them; or, to express the same thing in "other words, they look upon the bible as a mute master, who, by signs and sigures, points " out and discovers that living master and effec-" tual guide who dwells in the mind. Thirdly, "That they who are without this written word, " fuch as the Jews, Mahometans, and favage na-" tions, are not, on that account, either removed " from the path, or destitute of the doctrine of "falvation, though they indeed want this infe-rior and fubordinate help to its attainment. "For if they only attend to this inward teacher, " who always speaketh when the man is filent, they " will learn abundantly, from him, all that is " necessary to be known and practised in order " to their final happiness; that of consequence, " fourthly, The kingdom of CHRIST is of a valt " extent, and comprehends the whole race of " mankind. For all have CHRIST within them, and therefore, even those who are deprived " of the means of knowledge, and live in the " groffest ignorance of the Christian religion, are " capable of obtaining, through him, wisdom " here, and happiness hereafter. Hence also " they conclude, that those who lead virtuous " lives, and refift the impulse of their lusts and " passions, whether they be Jews, Mahometans, " or Polytheifts, shall be united to God in this " life, by means of the CHRIST that lies hidden " within them, and shall enjoy the fruits of this " union in the life to come. To these tenets "they add, in the fifth place, That a heavy, dark body, composed of corrupt matter, hinders " men from discerning, with ease, this bidden "CHRIST, and from hearing his divine and in-" ternal voice. Therefore they look upon it as 44 a matter of the highest importance, to watch " against ec against the pernicious consequences of this CENT. union between the foul and body, that the lat-" ter may not blunt the powers of the former, PART II. "diffurb its tranquillity, or, by the ministry of the outward fenses, fill it with the images of " vain, fenfible, and external objects." The confideration now mentioned engages them, lastly, "To look upon it as utterly incredible, "that God should ever again shut up, in the " fame material habitation, the fouls that are fet " free by death from their bodily prison; and "therefore they affirm, that the Gospel-account of the resurrection of the body must either be " interpreted in a figurative fense, or be under-"flood as pointing out the creation of a new and celeftial body [d]."

IX. It appears evidently from all this, that the Their docexistence of the man Christ Jesus, together with trine contents the circumstantial accounts we have in Scriptoning ture of his divine origin, his life, and actions, his fatisfaction, merits, and fufferings, make no effential part of the theological fystem of the Quakers, which is built upon a different founda-tion, and derives the whole plan and method of falvation from the CHRIST within. Hence feveral members of that fect, as we learn from writers of unquestionable authority, went such an extravagant length as to maintain, that the accounts we have of Jesus Christ, in the Gospelhistory, do not relate to the fon of God, who took upon him the nature of man, but to that CHRIST within, whose operations are recorded by the facred hiftorians in a figurative and allegorical

[[]d] The Quakers adopt all these tenets; they are at least obliged to adopt them, unless they renounce the fundamental principles of their fystem. We have omitted the mention of those points about which they dispute among themselves, that we may not appear to take pleafure in reprefenting them under odious colours.

language. This opinion, if we may confide in the testimonies of unexceptionable witnesses, is fo far from having loft its credit among them. that it is still openly professed by the American Quakers. Those of Europe, whether from the force of conviction or the suggestions of prudence, differ entirely from their brethren in this respect; they hold, "That the divine wisdom or reason " resided in the Son of the Virgin Mary, and " conveyed its instructions to mankind by his " ministry;" and they profess to believe, "that this divine man really did and suffered what is " recorded concerning him by the facred writers." It is nevertheless certain, that they express themfelves in a very ambiguous manner on many points that relate to the history of the divine Saviour; and, in a more particular manner, their notions concerning the fruits of his fufferings, and the efficacy of his death, are fo vague and obscure, that it is very difficult to know what is their real opinion about the degree of this efficacy, and the nature of these fruits. It is still further worthy of observation, that the European Quakers, though they acknowledge the reality of the life, actions, and fufferings of Christ, yet do not entirely reject the allegorical interpretation of our Saviour's History mentioned above; for they confider the events that happened to Christ, in the course of his ministry here upon earth, as the figns and emblems of those scenes through which the mental Christ must pass, in order to render us partakers of eternal falvation. Hence they talk in high-swoln and pompous strains (like their models the Mystics) of the birth, life, sufferings, death, and refurrection of CHRIST in the bearts of the faithful.

Their religious discipline, worship, and practice of the Quakers, flow from the same original source from which, as we have already ob-

ferved,

ferved, their doctrine and tenets were immediately CENT. derived. They meet for the purposes of religion on the same days which are set apart for the celebration of public worship in all other Christian churches; but they neither observe festivals, nor use external rites and ceremonies, nor suffer religion, which they place entirely in the mental worship of the Hidden CHRIST, to be shackled and cramped by positive institutions. All the members of their community, whether male or female, have an equal right to teach and exhort in their public meetings; for who, fay they, will prefume to exclude from the liberty of speaking to the Brethren, those persons in whom Christ dwells, and by whom he speaks? They reject the use of prayers, hymns, and the various outward forms of devotion, by which the public worship of other Christian churches is distinguished; and this, indeed, is an instance of their confistency with themselves, as it is the immediate confequence of their religious fystem; for, in their judgment, it is not the person who expresses his defires in a fet form of words, that can be faid to pray truly, but he, on the contrary, who, by a deep recollection, withdraws his mind from every outward object, reduces it to a state of absolute tranquillity, filences every inward motion and affection, and plunges it, as it were, into the abyss of Deity. They neither observe the institution of Baptism, nor do they renew the remembrance of Christ's death, and of the benefits that result from it, by the celebration of the Eucharist. They look upon these two institutions as merely Judaical, and allege, that our Saviour obferved them for no other end than to shew for once, in a vifible manner, the myftical purification of the foul, under the figure of baptism, and the spiritual nourishment of the inward man, under that of the Eucharist.

Their moral precepts.

XI. The moral doctrine of the Ouakers, which is remarkable for its excessive austerity, is chiefly comprehended in the two following precepts: First, "That the faithful are either to avoid en-" tirely every thing that tends to gratify the ex-" ternal fenses and passions, every thing that can " be ranked under the denomination of fenfual " or bodily pleafure; or, if fuch rigorous abiti-" nence be impossible in this present state, and " contrary to the evident laws of nature, such " pleafure is to be fo modified and reftrained by " reason and meditation, as to prevent its de-" basing and corrupting the mind. For as the " whole attention of the mind must be given to " the voice and orders of the internal guide, fo, "for this purpose, all possible care must be taken to remove it from the contagion of the " body, and from all intimate and habitual com-" merce with corporeal objects." By the fecond leading precept of morality among the Quakers, all imitation of those external manners, that go by the name of civility and politeness, as also several matters of form, usual in the conduct of life and in the connexions of human society, are thrictly prohibited as unlawful. Hence they are eafily diftinguished from all other Christian sects, by their outward deportment and their manner of life. They never falute any person they meet in their way, nor employ in their convertation the usual manner of address, and the appellations that civility and custom have rendered a matter of decency, at least, if not of duty; they never express their respect for magistrates or persons in authority, either by bodily gestures, titles of ho-nour, or in general by any of the marks of homage that are paid them by persons of all other denominations. They carry their pacific fentiments to fuch an extravagant length, as to renounce the right of felf-defence, and let pass with impunity, impunity, and even without refistance, the attacks CENT. that are made on their possessions, their reputation, nay, on their lives. They refuse to confirm PART II. their testimonies by an oath, to appear in behalf of their property before a civil tribunal, or to accuse those who have injured them. To these negative parts of their external conduct, they add peculiar circumstances of a positive kind, that discover the same austere, stiff, proud, and formal spirit; for they distinguish themselves, in a striking manner, from the rest of their fellowcitizens, by the gravity of their aspect, the rustic simplicity of their apparel, the affected tone of their voice, the stiffness of their conversation, and the frugality of their tables. It is, however, affirmed by persons of credit, who are eye-witnesses of what passes among the members of this fect, that the modern, and more especially the English Quakers, whom trade has furnished with the means of luxury, have departed from this rigid and austere manner of life, and daily grow more reconciled to the outward pleafures and enjoyments of the world. These more sociable Quakers are also said to modify and explain the theology of their ancestors, in such a manner as to render it more rational than it was in its primitive state. At the same time it is certain, that many of the members of this fect have either a false notion, or no notion at all, of that ancient theology.

XII. The principles of this community feem Their form to exclude the very idea of order, discipline, and of ecclesian ecclesiastical government. Its leading members, vernment. however, began to perceive, in process of time. that without laws and rulers it could not subfift, but must inevitably fall into confusion and ruin. They accordingly erected a council of Elders, who discuss and determine matters of a doubtful or difficult nature, and use all possible care and diligence in inspecting the conduct of the Brethren, and in preventing whatever they look upon as prejudicial to the interests of the community. The names of those that enter into the state of wedlock are given in to those leading members. who also keep an exact register of the births and deaths that happen in their fociety. They exercife, moreover, a certain degree of authority over those who speak in their meetings; since it is well known, that in some places these speakers shew their discourses to the ruling Elders before they deliver them, in order that they may judge whether or no they are fit to be repeated in public. For fince the abuse that was made of the unbounded liberty that every individual had to instruct and exhort the congregation, and to fpeak and harangue when the pretended spirit moved them, new regulations have been observed; and this liberty has been confiderably modified, in feveral places, to avoid the mockery, contempt, and cenfure, to which the community was constantly exposed, by the abfurd, incoherent, and infipid discourses of many of its members. There are also in some of the more confiderable congregations, and more especially in those that are erected at London, certain persons, whose vocation it is to be always prepared to fpeak to the people, in case none of the congregation find themselves inwardly moved, or disposed to perform that office. The appointment of these professed speakers was designed to remedy an inconveniency that frequently happened in the Quaker-meetings, even that the whole affembly was difmiffed without either inftruction or exhortation, because none found themselves moved to speak. It is indeed to be observed, that this public difcourse is not looked upon by the Quakers as an effential part of their religion and worthip; for the Brethren and Sifters do not meet that they may hear the words of an external teacher.

Ii4

teacher, but that they may listen with recollection CENT. to the voice of the divine instructor, which every one carries with him in his own breast, or, to use their own phrase, that they may commune with themselves. Nevertheless, as these mute assemblies excite the laughter of their adversaries, and expose them to the reproach of enthusiasm and frenzy, they have, on that account, appointed fixed speakers, to whom they give a small falary, that the whole time of their meeting may not be passed in silence [d].

The Quakers have, annually, a general affembly of the whole fect, which meets at London the week before Whitfunday, and is composed of deputies from all their particular congregations. They still complain, notwithstanding the toleration they enjoy, of certain severities and hardships; but these are entirely owing to their obstinate refusal to pay those tithes, which, by the laws of the land, are designed for the support of the established church.

[d] The truth of this account of fixed Speakers appointed to discourse and exhort, when the spirit does not move any of the other brethren, and rewarded for their pains, is denied by the writer of the Letter to Dr. FORMEY; we leave the decision of the matter to those who have an opportunity of examining the fact.

The various

the Mennomites.

CHAP. V.

Concerning the Mennonites, or Anabaptists.

I. A FTER various scenes of trial and perplexity, the Mennonites at length found, during this century, the tranquillity they had long fought after in vain. They arrived, indeed, at this state of repose by very slow steps; for though, in the preceding age, they were admitted to the rights and privileges of citizens in the United Provinces, yet it was a long time before their folicitations and pleas of innocence could engage the English, the Swifs, and Germans, to receive them in their bosom, and to abrogate the laws that had been enacted against them. civil magistrates, in these countries, had still before their eyes the enormities committed by the ancient Anabaptists; and besides, they could not perfuade themselves, that a set of men, who looked upon all oaths as finful, and declared that magistracy and penal laws have no place in the kingdom of CHRIST, had the qualities and fentiments that are necessary to conflitute a good citizen. Hence we find, even in this century, feveral examples of great feverities employed against the Anabaptists, and some instances of even capital punishments being inflicted on them $\lceil e \rceil$. But now, that the demonstrations of their innocence and probity are clear and unquestionable,

[[]e] The feverities exercised in Savitzerland against the Mennonites are recorded by Ottius, in his Annal. Analogt. p. 337. and more particularly those that they suffered in the year 1693, by Hottinger, in his German work, intitled, Schweizerijche Kirchen-Historie, vol. i. p. 1101. nor, even in this present century, have they been treated more mildly in the Canton of Bern, as appears from Schir's Historia Mennonitar. cap. x. p. 289. in which we find the letters of the States-General of the United Provinces interceding with that Canton in stionable, they enjoy the fweets of security and CENT. repose, not only in the United Provinces, but also in England, Germany, and Prussia, where they PART II. procure, by their honest industry, and particularly by their application to trade and commerce, an ample subsistence for themselves and their families.

II. The wifer members of this community Union and eafily perceived, that their external tranquillity concord refored awould neither be stable nor permanent, unless mong them. their intestine discords were removed, and their ancient disputes, about trifling and unimportant matters, charitably terminated. They accordingly used their most zealous endeavours to diffuse the sweets of charity and concord throughout their fect; nor were their labours altogether unsuccessful. In the year 1630, a considerable part of the Anabaptists of Flanders, Germany, and Friesland, concluded their debates in a conference held at Amsterdam, and entered into the bonds of fraternal communion, each, notwithstanding, referving to themselves a liberty of retaining certain opinions. This affociation was renewed, and confirmed by new refolutions, in the year 1649, by the Anabaptists of Flanders and Germany, between whom great divisions had reigned [f]. All these formed a bond of union with those branches of the fect that were most distinguished by their moderation; and they mitigated and corrected, in various respects, the rigorous laws of Menno and his fuccessors.

their behalf. A fevere perfecution was fet on foot against them in the Palatinate in the year 1694, which was faspended by the intercession of WILLIAM III., king of Great Britain. See SCHYN, ibid. p. 265. Bishop BURNET mentions some instances of Anabaptists suffering death in England during the feventeenth century, in the first volume of his History of his orun Times.

[f] HERM, SCHYN, Plenior Deductio Historia Mennonit. P. 41, 42.

CENT. XVII. Sact. II. Part II.

Different lects of Anabartists.

III. Therefore, at this day, the whole community may be divided into two large fects, the one comprehending the more Refined Anabaptists, remarkable for their austerity, who are also called Flemings or Flandrians; and the others called (in the Dutch language) the Groffer Anabaptists, who are of a milder complexion, and an easier and more moderate character, and go commonly under the denomination of Waterlandians. have given already a particular account of the origin and etymology of these denominations. Each of these sects is subdivided into a variety of branches, more especially the refined and austere Anabaptists, who have not only produced two feparate focieties, distinguished by the names of Groningenists [g], and Dantzigers or Prushans [b], but also a considerable number of more obscure and inconsiderable factions, which differ in doctrine, discipline, and manners; and agree in nothing but the name of Anabaptifts, and in some ancient opinions that have been unanimously embraced by all the members of that fect. All the refined Anabaptists are the rigid followers of SIMON MENNO, and stedfastly maintain, though not all with the fame degree of feverity and rigour, the fentiments of their chief on the following points-the human nature of Christ -the obligation that binds us to wash the feet of strangers in consequence of our Saviour's command-the necessity of excommunicating and of avoiding, as one would do the plague, not only avowed finners, but also those who depart, even in some light instances, from the simplicity of their ancestors, and are tainted with any appearance of evil-the contempt that is due to human learning, and other matters of lefs mo- cent. ment [i]. It is however to be observed, that in our times, fome of the congregations of this refined feet have been gradually departing from this austere system, and are proceeding, though with a flow pace, towards the opinions and discipline of the more moderate Anabaptifts.

[[]g] So called, because they met at certain stated times in the city of Groningen.

[[]b] They derive this denomination from their adopting the manners and discipline of the Prussians.

IV. All these Anabaptists adopt a form of ec- The exterclesiastical government and discipline, that is not term of the Menno-administered by three distinct orders of persons, nitechurch. The first order is that of the Bishops or Presbyters, who always prefide in the confiftory, and are alone invested with the power of administering the facraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper. The fecond is that of the Teachers, who are fer apart for the purposes of public instruction, and the celebration of divine worship. The third comprehends the Deacons, who are chosen out of both fexes. These three orders compose the confiftory or council by which the church is governed. All matters of importance are proposed, examined, and decided, in the meetings of the Brethren. The ministers are elected to their holy office by their fuffrages, and are all, the Deacons excepted, installed by public prayers, attended with imposition of hands.

V. Among the inferior fects of the rigid Ana- The Uckebaptists, the most considerable is that which passes wallists, under the denomination of Uckewallists, and is so called after its founder UKE WALLES, a native of Friesland. This rustic, rigid, and ignorant fectary, not only exhorted his followers to maintain the primitive and auftere doctrine of MENNO, without fuffering it to be foftened or altered in the fmallest degree, but also took it into his head to propagate, jointly with another innovator, named John Leus, in the year 1637, a fingular opinion concerning the falvation of Judas, and the rest of Christ's murderers. To give an air of plaufibility to the favourable opinion he entertained concerning the eternal state of this arch-apostate, he invented the following odd hypothesis, "That the period of time that ex-"tended from the birth of CHRIST to the de-" fcent of the Holy Ghost, and was, as it were, " the diffinctive term that separated the Tewish " from the Christian dispensation, was a time of " deep ignorance and darkness, during which " the Jews were void of light, and entirely de-" ftitute of divine fuccour; and that, of confe-" quence, the fins and enormities that were com-" mitted during this interval were in a great " meafure excufable, and could not merit the " feverest displays of the divine justice." This idle fiction met with no indulgence, either from the Mennonites on the one hand, or from the magistrates of Groningen on the other; for the former excluded its inventor from their communion, and the latter banished him from their city. He fixed his refidence in the adjacent province of East-Friesland, and there drew after him a confiderable number of disciples, whose descendants still subsist in the neighbourhood of Groningen, Friesland, and also in Lithuania and Prussia, and have their own religious affemblies, separate from those of the other Mennonites. As they have little intercourse with any but those of their own communion, it is not an easy matter to know, with certainty, whether they perfevere in the fingular opinion that proved fo detrimental to the interest of their leader. It is at least certain, that they follow fcrupulously the steps of their original founder Menno, and exhibit a lively image of the primitive manners and constitution of the Mennonites. They re-baptize all those who leave leave other Christian churches to embrace their communion. Their apparel is mean beyond expression, and they avoid every thing that has the most distant appearance of elegance or ornament. They let their beards grow to an enormous length; their hair, uncombed, lies in a diforderly manner on their shoulders; their countenances are marked with the strongest lines of dejection and melancholy; and their habitations and household furniture are fuch as are only fitted to anfwer the demands of mere necessity. Such, moreover, is the feverity of their discipline, that any member of their community, who departs in the smallest instance from this austere rule, is immediately excluded from the fociety, and avoided by all the Brethren as a public peft. Their infpectors or bishops, whom they diftinguish from the ministers, whose office is to preach and instruct, are chosen by an assembly composed of all the congregations of the fect. The ceremony of washing the feet of strangers, who come within the reach of their hospitality, is looked upon by them as a rite of divine institution. We shall not enlarge upon the other circumstances of their ritual, but only observe, that they prevent all attempts to alter or modify their religious discipline, by preserving their people from every thing that bears the remotest aspect of learning and science; from whatever, in a word, might have a tendency to enlighten their devout ignorance.

[[]i] See a German work entitled, Nachrichten von dem gegenwardigen Zustande der Menoniten, by Rues, 1743.

CENT.

VI. The more moderate, who are called the The Water-Groffer, or less scrupulous Anabaptists, are composed of certain inhabitants of Waterland, Flanders, Friesland, and Germany, who entered into an affociation, as has been already observed, and commonly pass under the denomination of Waterlandians. This community has abandoned the fevere discipline and fingular opinions of MENNO, whom, nevertheless, they generally respected as their primitive parent and founder, and have advanced a step nearer than the other Anabaptists to the religious doctrines and customs of other Christian churches. They are, however, divided into two diffinct fects, which bear the respective denominations of Frieslanders and Waterlandians, and are both without bishops, employing no other ecclefiaffical ministers than Presbyters and Deacons. Each congregation of this fect is independent on all foreign jurisdiction, having its own ecclefiastical council or consistory, which is composed of Presbyters and Deacons. The supreme spiritual power is, nevertheless, in the hands of the people, without whose consent nothing of importance can be carried into execution. Their Presbyters are, generally speaking, men of learning, and apply themselves with succefs to the study of physic and philosophy. And there is a public professor supported, at present, by the sect at Amsterdam, for the instruction of their youth in the various branches of philosophy and facred erudition.

The Gallenifts and Apoftoolians.

VII. One of these Waterlandian sects was divided, in the year 1664, into two factions, of which the one were called Galenists, and the other Apofoolians, from their respective leaders. The founder of the former was GALEN ABRAHAM HAAN, a doctor of physic, and pastor of a Mennonite congregation at Amsterdam, who has received the applause even of his enemies, on account of his uncommon penetration and elo-This eminent Anabaptist, in imitation of the Arminians, confidered the Christian religion as a fystem that laid much less stress upon faith than upon practice; and he was for receiving into the communion of the Mennonites all those who acknowledged the divine origin of the books of the Old and New Testament, and led holy holy and virtuous lives. Such, in his judgment, CENT, were true Christians, and had an undoubted right to all the rights and privileges that belong to PARTII. that character. These comprehensive terms of communion were peculiary favourable to his own theological fentiments, fince his notions concerning Christ's divinity, and the falvation of mankind by his death and merits, were very different from those of the Mennonites, and coincided a good deal with the Socinian system.

Several persons opposed the sentiments of this Latitudinarian, and more especially Samuel Apostool, an eminent paftor among the Mennonites at Amsterdam, who not only defended, with the utmost zeal, the doctrine generally received among the Mennonites, in relation to the divinity of CHRIST and the fruits of his death, but also maintained that ancient hypothesis of a vifible and glorious church of CHRIST upon earth, that was peculiar to this feet $\lceil k \rceil$. Thus a controverfy was kindled, which produced the division now mentioned; a division which the zealous efforts of feveral of the wifeft and most respectable members of this community have hitherto proved infufficient to heal. The Galenists are not less disposed than the Arminians to admit, as members of their community, all those who call themselves Christians; and they are the only fect of the Anabaptists who reject the denomination of Mennonites. The Apostoolians, on the contrary, admit to their communion those only who profess to believe all the points of doctrine which are contained in their public confession of faith $\lceil l \rceil$.

[k] For a more particular account of these two Mennonites, fee SCHYN's Deductio plenior Hiftor. Mennonit. cap. xv. p. 318. and xviii. p. 237.

[1] CASP. COMMELINI Descriptio Urbis Amstelodami, tom. i. p. 500.—Stoupa's Religion des Hollandois, p. 20.—BEN-THEM'S Hollandischer Schulund Kirchen-Staat, p. i. ch. xix. p. 830.

CENT. XVII. SECT. II. PART II.

CHAP. VI.

Concerning the SOCINIANS and ARIANS.

The flourishing state of the Socinians.

I. A BOUT the commencement of this century, the Sect of the Socinians feemed to be well established, and their affairs were even in a flourishing fituation. In Transylvania and Lucko they enjoyed the liberty of holding, without molestation, their religious assemblies, and profeffing publicly their theological opinions. advantages that attended their fituation in Poland were still more considerable; for they had at Racow a public feminary of learning, which was furnished with professors eminently distinguished by their erudition and genius, together with a press for the publication of their writings; they had also a considerable number of congregations in that district, and were supported by the patronage of feveral persons of the highest distinction. Elated with this scene of prosperity, they began to form more extensive views, and aimed at enlarging the borders of their community, and procuring it patrons and protectors in other countries. There are in being authentic records, from which it appears, that they fent emissaries with this view, about the commencement of this century, into Holland, England, Germany, and Prussia, who endeavoured to make proselytes to Socinianism in these countries, among men of learning and men in power. For it is remarkable, that the Socinians, in propagating their religious principles, have always followed a quite different method from that which has been observed by other fects. It has been the general practice of fectaries and innovators to endeavour to render themselves popular, and to begin by gaining the multitude to their fide; but the disciples of Socinus, who are perpetually perpetually exalting the dignity, prerogatives, CENT. and authority of reason, have this peculiarity in their manner of proceeding, that they are at very PART II. little pains to court the favour of the people, or to make profelytes to their cause among those who are not diftinguished from the multitude by their rank or their abilities. It is only among the learned and the great that they feek for disciples and patrons with a zealous affiduity.

though they were conducted and executed by grefe and persons of whom the greatest part were eminent, both on account of their rank and abilities, was nevertheless far from answering the views and expectations of the community. In most places their fuccess was doubtful, at best but inconsiderable; in fome, however, they were favourably received, and feemed to employ their labours to purpose. They had no where a more flattering prospect of success than in the academy of Alterf, where their fentiments and their cause were promoted with dexterity by Ernest Sohner, an acute and learned peripatetician, who was professor of physic and natural philosophy. This fubtile philosopher, who had joined the Socinians during his refidence in Holland, instilled their principles into the minds of his fcholars with much greater facility, by his having acquired the highest reputation both for learning and piety. The death, indeed, of this eminent man, which happened in the year 1612, deprived the rifing fociety of its chief ornament and support; nor could the remaining friends of Socinianism carry on the cause of their community with such art and dexterity, as to escape the vigilant and severe eye of the other professors. Their secret defigns were accordingly brought to light in the year 1616; and the contagion of Socinianism, which was gathering strength from day to day, K k 2

II. The effect of the missions now mentioned, The proat Alterf. SECT. II.

C E N T. and growing imperceptibly into a reigning fystem, was all of a sudden diffipated and extinguished by PART II. the vigilant feverity of the magistrates of Nuremberg. The foreign students, who had been infected with these doctrines, saved themselves by flight; while the natives, who were chargeable with the fame reproach, accepted of the remedies that were prefented to them by the healing hand of orthodoxy, and returned quietly to their former theological fystem [m].

The decline of Socinianifm, and the fufferings of its votaries in Polani.

III. The establishment of the Socinians in Poland, though it feemed to rest upon solid foundations, was nevertheless of a short duration [n]. Its chief supports were withdrawn in the year 1638, by a public decree of the diet. It happened in this year that some of the students of Racow vented, in an irregular and tumultuous manner, their religious resentment against a crucifix, at which they threw stones, till they beat it down out of its place. This act of violence excited fuch a high degree of indignation in the Roman Catholics, that they vowed revenge, and fulfilled this vow in the feverest manner; for it was through their importunate folicitations that the terrible law was enacted at Warfaw, by which it was refolved, that the academy of Racow should be demolished, its professors banished

[m] The learned Gust avus George Zeltner, formerly professor of divinity in the academy of Alterf, composed an ample and learned account of this theological revolution, drawn principally from manuscript-records, which was published at Leiffic, in the year 1729, in two volumes, in 4to. by GEBAUER, under the following title : Historia Crypto-Socinianifici, Alterfinæ quondam Academiæ infesti, arcana.

[n] We have a circumstantial account of the flourishing flate of the Racovian academy, while it was under the direction of the learned MARTIN RUARUS, in the Cimbria Littera. ta of Mollerus, tom. i. p. 572. where we learn that Rua. RUS was a native of Holftein, who became a profelyte to the

Socinian fystem.

PART II.

with ignominy, the printing-house of the Socinians destroyed, and their churches shut. this was executed without the smallest alleviation or the leaft delay, notwithstanding the efforts made by the powerful patrons of the Socinians to ward off the blow [o]. But a catastrophe, still more terrible, awaited them; and the perfecution now mentioned was the forerunner of that dreadful revolution, which, about twenty years afterwards, brought on the entire ruin of this community in Poland: For by a public and solemn act of the diet held at Warfaw, in the year 1658, all the Socinians were banished for ever from the territory of that republic, and capital punishment was denounced against all those who should either profess their opinions, or harbour their perfons. The unhappy exiles were, at first, allowed the space of three years to settle their affairs, and to dispose of their possessions; but this term was afterwards abridged by the cruelty of their enemies, and reduced to two years. In the year 1661, the terrible edict was renewed; and all the Socinians that yet remained in Poland were barbaroufly driven out of that country, some with the loss of their goods, others with the loss of their lives, as neither fickness, nor any domestic confideration, could fuspend the execution of that rigorous fentence $\lceil p \rceil$.

IV. A part of these exiles, who sought for a The sate of refuge among their Brethren in Transylvania, nan exiles. funk under the burthen of their calamities, and perished amidst the hardships to which they were exposed.

[o] Epistola de Wissowatii wita in Sandii Biblioth. Anti-Trinitar. p. 233.—Gust. Georg. Zeltneri Historia Crypto-Socinianismi Altorfini, vol. i. p. 299.

[p] STANISLAI LUBIENIECII Hijloria Reformat. Poloniea, lib. iii. c. xvii, xviii. p. 279.—Equites Poloni Vindiciæ pra Unitariorum in Polonia Religionis libertate apud Sandium, in Biblioth. Anti-Trinitar. p. 267.

 Kk_3

CENT. XVII. SECT. II.

exposed. A considerable number of these unhappy emigrants were dispersed through the ad-PARTIL jacent provinces of Silesia, Brandenburg, and Prussia; and their posterity still subsists in those countries. Several of the more eminent members of the fect, in confequence of the protection granted them by the duke of Brieg, refided for fome time at Crossen, in Silesia [q]. Others went in fearch of a convenient fettlement for themfelves and their brethren, into Holland, England, Holstein, and Denmark. Of all the Socinian exiles, none discovered such zeal and industry for the interests and establishment of the sect as STA-NISLAUS LUBIENIECIUS, a Polish knight, distinguished by his learning, and fingularly esteemed by persons of the highest rank, and even by several fovereign princes, on account of his eloquence, politeness, and prudence. This illustrious patron of Socinianism succeeded so far in his defigns, as to gain the favour of FREDERIC III., king of Denmark; CHRISTIAN ALBERT, duke of Holstein: and Charles Lewis, elector Palatine: and thus had almost obtained a secure retreat and fettlement for the Socinians, about the year 1662, at Altena, Fredericstadt, and Manheim; but his measures were disconcerted, and all his hopes entirely frustrated, by the opposition and remonstrances of the clergy established in these countries; he was opposed in Denmark by SUANIN-GIUS bishop of Zealand, in Holstein by REINBOTH, and in the Palatinate by JOHN LEWIS FABRIcius $\lceil r \rceil$. Several other attempts were made, in

[[]q] LUBIENIECII Historia Reformat. Polon. cap. xviii. p. 285. where there is a letter written by the Socinians of Croffen. [r] See Sandii, Bibliotheca Anti-Trinitar. p. 165.—Historia Vitæ Lubieniecii, prefixed to his Historia Reformationis Polonicæ, p. 7, 8.—Molleri Introductio in Histor. Chersones. Cimbrica, p. ii. p. 105. and his Cimbria Litterata, tom. ii. p. 487.-Jo. HENR. HEIDEGGERI Vita Joh. Lud. FABRICII, subjoined to the works of the latter, p. 38. different different countries, in favour of Socinianism; but CENT. their fuccess was still less considerable; nor could any of the European nations be perfuaded to PART II. grant a public fettlement to a fect, whose members denied the divinity of CHRIST.

V. The remains, therefore, of this unfortunate community are, at this day, difperfed through different countries, particularly in the kingdoms of England and Prussa, the electorate of Brandenburg, and the United Provinces, where they lie more or less concealed, and hold their religious affemblies in a clandestine manner. They are, indeed, faid to exercise their religion publicly in England [rr], not in confequence of a legal tolera-

[rr] The Socinians in England have never made any figure as a Community, but have rather been dispersed among that great variety of fects that have arisen in a country where Liberty displays its most glorious fruits, and at the same time exhibits its most striking inconveniencies. Besides, sew ecclefiaftics, or writers of any note, have adopted the theological fystem now under consideration, in all its branches. The Socinian doctrine relating to the defign and efficacy of the death of Christ had indeed many abettors in England during the XVIIth century; and it may be prefumed, without temerity, that its votaries are rather increased than diminished in the present; but those divines who have abandoned the Athanasian hypothesis concerning the Trinity of Persons in the Godhead, have more generally gone into the Arian and Semi-Arian notions of that inexplicable subject, than into those of the Socinians, who deny that JESUS CHRIST existed before his appearance in the human nature. The famous JOHN BIDDLE, after having maintained both in public and in private during the reign of CHARLES, and the protectorship of CROMWELL, the Unitarian system, erected an independent congregation in London, which is the only British church we have heard of, in which all the peculiar doctrines of Socinianism were inculcated; for, if we may give credit to the account of SIR PETER PETT, this congregation held the following notions: " That " the fathers under the old covenant had only temporal pro-" mifes-that faving faith confided in universal obedience " performed to the commands of God and Christ;-that "Christ arose again only by the power of the Father, and not " his own; -that justifying faith is not the pure gift of God, K k 4

XVII. SECT. II.

CENT. tion, but through the indulgent connivance of the civil magistrate [s]. Some of them have PART II. embraced the communion of the Arminians; others have joined with that fect of the Anabaptifts that are diffinguished by the name of Galenists; and in this there is nothing at all furprifing, fince neither the Arminians nor Anabaptifts require from those that enter into their communion an explicit or circumstantial declaration of their religious fentiments. It is also said, that a confiderable number of this difperfed community became members of the religious fociety called Collegiants [t]. Amidst these perpetual changes

> " but may be acquired by men's natural abilities;—that faith " cannot believe any thing contrary to, or above reason;-"that there is no original fin ;-that Christ hath not the " fame body now in glory, in which he fuffered and rose " again; -that the faints shall not have the fame body in " heaven which they had on earth;-that Christ was not " Lord or King before his refurrection, or Priest before his " ascension; - that the faints shall not, before the Day of " Judgment, enjoy the blifs of heaven ;-that God doth not " certainly know future contingencies; - that there is not " any authority of fathers or general councils in determining " matters of faith ;-that Christ, before his death, had not " any dominion over the Angels;—and that Christ, by dying,
> " made not fatisfaction for us." See the Preface to Sir PE-TER PETT'S Happy fature State of England, printed at London in 1688.

> [6] The Socinians, who refide at prefent in the diffrict of Mark, used to meet, some years ago, at stated times, at Koning fivald, a village in the neighbourhood of Frankfort on the Odr. See the Recueil de Litterature, de Philosophie et d'Histoire (published at Amsterdam in the year 1731, in 8vo *), p. 44. - They published, in the year 1716, at Berlin, their Confession of Faith in the German language, which is to be found, with a refutation thereto annexed, in a book, intitled, Den Theologijeken Heb. Offern. part x. p. 852.

[7] This community, of which there is an account given in the beginning of the following chapter, called their religious meetings Collegies, a Dutch word, which fignifies congregation or affembly, and hence they were denominated Col-

* The author of this collection was one JORDAN, who was pafter of a thursh in the neighbourh, ed of Berline

and

and viciffitudes, it was not possible that the So- CENT. XVII. cinians could maintain an uniform system of SECT. II. doctrine, or preferve unaltered and entire the re- PART II. ligious tenets handed down to them by their anceftors. On the contrary, their peculiar and distinctive opinions are variously explained and understood both by the learned and illiterate members of their community, though they all agree in rejecting the doctrine of the Trinity, and that also of the divinity and satisfaction of Jesus Christ [u].

VI. After the Socinians, as there is a great affinity between the two fects, it is proper to mention the Arians, who had feveral celebrated writers in this century, fuch as SANDIUS and BIDDLE [w]. Of those who also passed under the ge-

Ariansa

[u] Many examples might be alleged in proof of this; it will be sufficient to mention that of the learned CRELLIUS, who, though he was profesior of theology among the Socinians, yet differed in his opinions, about many points of doctrine, from the fentiments of Sociaus and the Racovian Catechifm. and would not be called a Socinian, but an Artemonite *. See the Journal Litteraire, tom. xvii. p. i. p. 150. and the account I have given of this celebrated man in my Syntagm. Dissertationum ad fanctiores Disciplinas pertinentium, p. 352.— Unschuld. Nachriet. 1750. p. 942.—Nouveau Diction. Historique et Critique, tom. ii. p. ii. p. 88. F This last citation is erroneous; there is no account of CRELLIUS in the place here referred to.

[w] For an account of SANDIUS, father and fon, fee Ar-NOLD and other writers. The Life of BIDDLE is to be found in the Nouveau Diction. Historique et Critique, tom. i. р. ii. р. 288. © Dr. Мовнетм places Върдей mproperly among the Arians; it is manifest that he belongs to the Socinians, fince, in the IIId article of his Confession of Faith, he professeth to believe that Christ has no other than a human nature. See the Socinian Tracts, intitled, The Faith of one God, &c. published at London in 4to. in 1691. See also above, note [m].

^{*} After ARTEMON, who lived under the reign of the Emperor Se-VERUS, and denied the pre-existence and divinity of IESUS CHRIST.

CENT. XVII. Sect. II. Part II.

neral denomination of Anti-Trinitarians and Unitarians there are many that may be placed in the class of the Socinians and Arians: for the term Unitarian is very comprehensive, and is applicable to a great variety of persons, who, notwithstanding, agree in this common principle, that there is no real distinction in the divine nature. The denomination of Arian is also given in general to all who consider Jesus Christ as inferior and subordinate to the Father. But as this subordination may be understood and explained in a variety of ways, it is evident, that the term Arian, as it is used in modern language, is susceptible of different fignifications; and that of consequence the persons to whom it is applied cannot be all confidered in the fame point of light with the ancient Arians, nor supposed to agree perfectly with each other in their religious tenets.

CHAP. VII.

Concerning some Seets of Inferior Note.

The Collegiants or Rhi: fhergers, I. T will not be amifs to take notice here of a few fects of inferior confequence and note, which we could not mention with propriety in the history of the larger and more extensive communities that we have been passing in review, and which, nevertheless, we cannot omit, for several reasons. While the disputes and tumults that the Arminian system produced in Holland, in the year 1619, were at the greatest height, then arose that religious society, whose members hold at Rhinsberg, in the neighbourhood of Leyden, a solemn assembly every half year, and are generally rally known under the denomination of Collegi- CENT. ants [x]. This community was founded by three $\sup_{S \in T_1, T_2} XVII.$ brothers, whose name was VANDER KODDE, who PART II. passed their days in the obscurity of a rural life, but are faid to have been men of eminent piety, well acquainted with facred literature, and great enemies to religious controverly. They had for their affociate Anthony Cornelius, a man alfo of a mean condition, and who had no qualities that could give any degree of weight or credit to their cause. The descendants and followers of these men acquired the name of Collegiants from this particular circumstance, that they called their religious affemblies Colleges. All are admitted to the communion of this fect who acknowledge the divinity of the holy Scriptures, and endeavour to live fuitably to their precepts and doctrines, whatever their peculiar fentiments may be concerning the nature of the Diety, and the truths of Christianity. Their numbers are very considerable in the provinces of Holland, Utrecht, Friesland, and Westfriesland. They meet twice every week, namely on Sundays and Wednesdays, for the purposes of divine worship; and after singing a pfalm or hymn, and addressing themselves to the Diety by prayer, they explain a certain portion of the New Testament. The semale members of the community are not allowed to fpeak in public; but all others, without any exception founded on rank, condition, or incapacity, have a right to communicate the refult of their meditations to the affembly, and to fubmit their fentiments to the judgment of the Brethren. All likewise have an unquestionable right to examine and oppose what any of the Brethren has advanced, provided their opposition be attended with a spirit of Christian charity and moderation.

CENT.

There is a printed lift of the passages of Scripture, that are to be examined and illustrated at each of PART II, their religious meetings; fo that any one who is ambitious of appearing among the speakers, may fludy the subject before-hand, and thus come fully prepared to descant upon it in public. The Brethren, as has been already observed, have a general affembly twice a year at Rhinfberg, where they have ample and convenient houses for the education of orphans and the reception of strangers; and there they remain together during the space of four days, which are employed in hearing discourses that tend to edification, and exhortations that are principally defigned to inculcate brotherly love and fanctity of manners. The facrament of the Lord's supper is also administered during this assembly; and those adult persons, that desire to be baptized, receive the facrament of Baptism, according to the ancient and primitive manner of celebrating that inftitution, even by immersion. Those of the Brethren that refide in the province of Friesland, have at present an annual meeting at Lewarden, where they administer the sacraments, as the considerable distance at which they live from Rhinsberg renders it inconvenient for them to repair thither twice a year. We shall conclude our account of the Collegiants by observing, that their community is of a most ample and extensive kind; that it comprehends persons of all ranks, orders, and fects, who profess themselves Christians, though their fentiments concerning the person and doctrine of the divine founder of Christianity be extremely different; that it is kept together, and its union maintained, not by the authority of rulers and doctors, the force of ecclefiaftical laws, the restraining power of creeds and confessions, or the influence of certain positive rites and institutions, but merely by a zeal for the advancement vancement of practical religion, and a defire of CENT. drawing inftruction from the study of the Holy SECT.

Scriptures [y].

II. In fuch a community, or rather amidst fuch a multitude as this, in which opinion is free, and every one is permitted to judge for himfelf in religious matters, diffensions and controversies can fearcely have place. However a debate, attended with fome warmth, arose, in the year 1672, between John and Paul Bredenburg, merchants of Rotterdam, on the one fide, and ABRA-HAM LEMMERMAN and FRANCIS CUIPER, merchants of Amsterdam, on the other. John Bre-DENBURG had erected a particular fociety, or college, in which he gave a course of lectures upon the religion of nature and reason; but this undertaking was highly disapproved of by LEM-MERMAN and CUIPER, who were for excluding reason altogether from religious inquiries and pursuits. During the heat of this controversy, Bredenburg discovered a manifest propensity towards the sentiments of Spinoza; nay, he even defended them publicly, and yet, at the fame time, professed a firm attachment to Christian religion [z]. Other debates of less confequence arose in this community, and the

[y] See the Differtation fur les usages de ceux qu'on appelle en Hollande Colligiens et Rhinobourgeois, in the Ceremonics Religieus's des tous les Peuples du Monde, tom. iv. p. 323.—as also a Dutch book, containing an account of the Collegients, and published by themselves under the following title: De Oerfpronck, Natuur, Handelwyz en Oogmerk der zo genaamde Rynburgsche Vergadering, at Amsterdam, in 4to. in the year 1736.

[2] The names of John Bredeneurg and Francis Cuiper are well known among the followers and adversaries of Spinoza; but the character and profession of these two disputants are less generally known. Bredenburg, or (as he is otherwise called) Breitenburg, was a Collegiant, and a merchant of Rotterdam, who propagated in a public manner the doctrine of Spinoza, and pretended to demon-

SECT. II.

CENT. the effect of those diffensions was a division of the Collegiants into two parties, which held their PART II. affemblies separately at Rhinsberg. This division happened in the year 1686, but it was healed about the commencement of the present century, by the death of those who had principally occafioned it; and then the Collegiants returned to their former union and concord [a].

III. The

firate mathematically its conformity to the dictates of reason. The same man not only professed Christianity, but moreover explained, recommended, and maintained, the Christian religion in the meetings of the Collegiants, and afferted, on all occasions, its divine original. To reconcile these striking contradictions, he declared, on the one hand, that reason and Christianity were in direct opposition to each other; but maintained, on the other, that we were obliged to believe, even against the evidence of the strongest mathematical demonstrations, the religious doctrines comprehended in the Holy Scriptures (this, indeed, was adding abfurdity to abfurdity). He affirmed, that truth was twofold, theological and philosophical; and that those propositions, which were false in theology, were true in philosophy. There is a brief, but accurate account, of the character and fentiments of BREDEN-BURG, in the learned work of the Jew, ISAAC OROBIO, intitled, Certamen Philosophicum propugnatæ veritatis divinæ et naturalis adversus Jo. BREDENBURGII principia, ex quibus, quod religio rationi repugnat, demonstrare nititur. This work, which contains BREDENBURG's pretended demonstrations of the philosophy of Spinoza, was first published in 8vo at Amfterdam, in the year 1703, and afterwards in 12mo at Bruffels, in 1731. FRANCIS CUIPER, who was the antagonist of BRE-DENBURG, acquired a confiderable reputation by his Arcana Atheismi detecta, i. e. The Secrets of Atheism detected. He was a bookfeller at Amsterdam; and it was he that published, among other things, the Bibliotheca Fratrum Polonorum seu Unitariorum. Those who have a tolerable acquaintance with the literary history of this century, know that Cuiper, on account of the very book which he wrote against BREDEN-BURG, was suspected of Spinozism, though he was a Collegiant, and a zealous defender of the Christian faith, as also of the perfect conformity that there is between right reason and true religion. Dr. Mosheim said a little before, in the text, that LEMMERMAN and CUIPER were for excluding reason altogether from religion; how then can he confiftently fay here of the latter, that he was a defender of the conformity that there is between reason and religion?

[a] Besides the authors who have been already mentioned those

III. The fect of the Labbadists were so called CENT. from their founder John Labbadie, a native of XVII. France, a man of no mean genius, and remark- PART II. able for a natural and masculine eloquence. This The Labbaman was born in the Romish communion, enter- dias. ed into the order of the Jesuits, and, being difmiffed by them [b], became a member of the Reformed church, and performed, with reputation, the ministerial functions in France, Switzerland, and Holland. He at length erected a new community, which refided fuccessively at Middleburgh in Zealand and at Amsterdam. In the year 1670, it was transplanted to Hervorden, a town in Westphalia, at the particular defire of the Princess Elizabeth, daughter of the elector Palatine, and abbess of Hervorden [c]. It was nevertheless driven from thence, notwithstanding the protection of this illustrious princess; and, in the year those who understand the German language may consult the curious work of SIMON FREDERIC RUES, intitled, Nachrichten vom Zustande der Mennoniten, p. 267.

[b] From this expression of our author, some may be led to imagine, that LABBADIE was expelled by the Jesuits from their fociety; and many have, in effect, entertained this notion. But this is a palpable mistake; and whoever will be at the pains of consulting the letter of the Abbé Goujet to Father Niceron (published in the Memoires des Hommes illustres, tom. xx. p. 142, 143.) will find that LABBADIE had long folicited his discharge from that society, and, after many refusals, obtained it at length in an honourable manner, by a public act figned at Bourdeaux, by one of the provincials, the 17th of April 1639. For a full account of this restless, turbulent, and visionary man, who, by his plans of reformation, conducted by a zeal destitute of prudence, produced much tumult and disorder, both in the Romish and reformed churches, fee his Life, composed with learning, impartiality, and judgment, by the Rev. Mr CHAUFFEPIED, in his Supplement to Mr BAYLE, intitled, Nouveau Dictionnaire Historique et Critique.

[c] This illustrious princess feems to have had as prevailing a taste for fanaticism, as her grandfather King JAMES I. of England had for scholastic theology. She carried on a correspondence SECT. II.

CENT. year 1672, fettled at Altena, where its founder died two years after his arrival. After the death PART II. of LABBADIE, his followers removed their wandering community to Wiewert, in the diffrict of North Holland, where it found a peaceful retreat, and foon fell into oblivion; fo that few, if any traces of it, are now to be found.

Among the perfons that became members of this fect, there were fome, whose learning and abilities gave it a certain degree of credit and reputation, particularly Anna Maria Schurman, of Utrecht, whose extensive erudition rendered her fo famous, in the republic of letters, during the last century. The members of this commu-nity, if we are to judge of them by their own account of things, did not differ from the Reformed church fo much in their tenets and doctrines, as in their manners and rules of discipline $\lceil d \rceil$; for their founder exhibited, in his own conduct. a most correspondence with PENN, the famous Quaker, and other members of that extravagant fect. She is, nevertheless, celebrated by certain writers, on account of her application to the fludy of philosophy and poetry. That a poetical fancy may have rendered her susceptible of fanatical impressions, is not impossible; but how these impressions could be reconciled with a philosophical spirit, is more disticult to imagine.

(F [d] LABBADIE always declared, that he embraced the doctrines of the Reformed church. Nevertheless, when he was called to perform the ministerial functions to a French church at Middleburgh in Zealand, he refused to subscribe their confession of faith. Besides, if we examine his writings, we shall find that he entertained very odd and fingular opinions on various fubjects. He maintained, among other things, "that God might, and did, on certain occasions, de-" ceive men-that the Holy Scripture was not sufficient to " lead men to falvation, without certain particular illumina-" tions and revelations from the Holy Ghoft-that in reading " the Scriptures we ought to give less attention to the literal " fense of the words than to the inward suggestions of the " fpirit, and that the efficacy of the word depended upon " him that preached it-that the faithful ought to have all "things in common-that there is no subordination or di-

a most austere model of sanctity and obedience, CENT. which his disciples and followers were obliged SECT. II. to imitate; and they were taught to look for the PART II. communion of faints, not only in the invisible church, but also in a vifible one, which, according to their views of things, ought to be composed of none but such persons as were distinguished by their sanctity and virtue, and by a pious progress towards perfection. There are ftill extant feveral treatifes composed by LABBA-DIE, which fufficiently discover the temper and fpirit of the man, and carry the evident marks

" flinction of rank in the true church of Christ-that "CHRIST was to reign a thousand years upon earth—that the contemplative life is a state of grace and union with "God, and the very height of perfection-that the Christian, " whose mind is contented and calm, fees all things in God, " enjoys the Deity, and is perfectly indifferent about every "thing that passes in the world—and that the Christian arrives " at that happy flate by the exercise of a perfect self-denial, " by mortifying the flesh and all sensual affections, and by " mental prayer." Befides thefe, he had formed fingular ideas of the Old and New Testament, considered as covenants, as also concerning the Sabbath and the true nature of a Christian church.

It is remarkable enough, that almost all the sectaries of an enthusiastical turn, were desirous of entering into communion with LABBADIE. The Brownists offered him their church at Middleburg, when he was suspended by the French synod from. his pastoral functions. The Quakers sent their two leading members Robert Barclay and George Keith to Amfterdam, while he refided there, to examine his doctrine; and, after feveral conferences with him, thefe two commissioners offered to receive him into their communion, which he refused, probably from a principle of ambition, and the defire of remaining head of a fect. Nay, it is faid, that the famous WILLIAM PENN made a second attempt to gain over the Labbadists; and that he went for that purpose to Wiewert, where they refided after the death of their founder, but without fuccefs. We do not pretend to answer for the certainty of these facts; but shall only observe, that they are related by MoL-LERUS in his Cimbria Literata, on the authority of a MS. Journal, of which feveral extracts have been given by JOACH. FRED. FELLER, in his Trimeft. 1x Monumentorum ineditorum, fect. iii. A. 1717. p. 498-500. VOL. V.

XVII. SECT. II. PART II.

CENT. of a lively and glowing imagination, that was not tempered by the influence of a fober and accurate judgment. And as persons of this character are fometimes carried, by the impetuolity of paffion and the feduction of fancy, both into erroneous notions and licentious purfuits, we are not perhaps to reject, in confequence of an excessive charity, the testimonies of those who have found many things worthy of censure, both in the life and doctrine of this turbulent enthusiast [e].

Bourignon and Poiret.

IV. Among the fanatical contemporaries of LABBADIE, was the famous Antoinette Bou-RIGNON DE LA PORTE, a native of Flanders, who pretended to be divinely inspired, and fet apart, by a particular interpolition of Heaven, to revive the true spirit of Christianity, that had been extinguished by theological animosities and debates. This female enthusiast, whose religious feelings were accompanied with an unparalleled vivacity and ardor, and whose fancy was exuberant beyond all expression, joined to these qualities a volubility of tongue, less wonderful indeed, yet much adapted to feduce the unwary. Furnished with these useful talents, she began to propagate her theological system, and her enthusiaffical notions made a great noise in Flanders, Holland, and fome parts of Germany, where she had refided fome years. Nor was it only the ignorant multitude that swallowed down with facility her visionary doctrines; since it is well known that feveral learned and ingenious men were perfuaded of their truth, and caught the contagion of her fanaticism. After experiencing CENT. various turns of fortune, and fuffering much vexation and mockeries on account of her religious fancies, she ended her days at Francker, in the province of Friesland, in the year 1680. Her writings were voluminous; but it would be a fruitless attempt to endeavour to draw from them an accurate and confiftent scheme of religion. For the pretended divine light, that guides people of this class, does not proceed in a methodical way of reasoning and argument; it discovers itself by flashes, which shed nothing but thick darkness in the minds of those who investigate truth with the understanding, and do not trust to the reports of fancy, that is fo often governed by fense and paffion. An attentive reader will, however, learn fomething by perufing the writings of this fanatical virgin; he will be perfuaded, that her intellect must have been in a disordered state; that the greatest part of her divine effusions were borrowed from the productions of the Mystics; and that, by the intemperance of her imagination, she has given an additional air of extravagance and abfurdity to the tenets she has derived from these pompous enthusiasts. If we attend to the main and predominant principle that reigns throughout the incoherent productions of Boursonon, we shall find it to be the following: That the Christian religion neither consists in knowledge nor in practice, but in a certain internal feeling and divine impulse, that arises immediately from communion with the Deity [f.] Among the more confiderable patrons of this fana-

[[]e] See Mollerus's Cimbria Literata, tom. iii. p. 35. & Isagoge ad Histor. Chersones. Cimbrica, p. ii. cap. v. p. 121.-Arnold, Histor. Ecclesiast. vol. i. p. ii. lib. xvii. cap. xxi. p. 1186.—Weisman, Eist. Eccles. Sæc. xvii. p. 297.—For an account of the two famous companions of LABBADIE, viz. Du Lignon and Yvon, fee Mollerus's Cimbria Literata, tom. ii. p. 472. 1020.

XV11. SECT. II. PART II.

[f] See for an ample account of Bourianon, the following writers: Moller. Cimbria Literata, tom. ii. p. 85. - Introductio in Histor. Chersonesi Cimbrica, p. ii. p. 151.-BAYLE's Dictionnaire, tom. i. at the article Bourignon .- Arnold, Historia Eccles. et Hæret, vol. ii. 😂 See also Poiret's Epist. de Austoribus Mysticis, sect. xiv. p. 565. This treatise of Poi-кет is inserted at the erd of his book, De Eruditione Solide S Suferficiaria, vol. ii. edit. 4to.

C E N T. XVII. SECT. H. PART H. tical doctrine, we may reckon Christian Bartholomew de Cordt, a Jansenist, and priest of the oratory at Mecklin, who died at Nordstrandt, in the dutchy of Slefwick [g]; and Peter Poiret, a man of a bold and penetrating genius, who was a great master of the Cartesian philosophy [b]. This latter has shewn, in a striking manner, by his own example, that knowledge and ignorance, reason and superstition, are often divided by thin partitions; and that they sometimes not only dwell together in the same person, but also, by an unnatural and unaccountable union, lend each other mutual assistance, and thus engender monstrous productions.

The Philadelphian Society.

V. The fame spirit, the same views, and the fame kind of religion, that diftinguished Bou-RIGNON, were observable in an English, and also a female fanatic, named JANE LEADLEY, who, towards the conclusion of this century, seduced by her visions, predictions, and doctrines, a considerable number of disciples, among whom there were fome persons of learning; and thus gave rife to what was called the Philadelphian Society. This woman was of opinion that all diffensions among Christians would cease, and the kingdom of the Redeemer become, even here below, a glorious scene of charity, concord, and felicity, if those who bear the name of Jesus, without regarding the forms of doctrine or discipline that diftinguish particular communions, would join in committing their fouls to the care of the internal guide, to be instructed, governed, and CENT. formed by his divine impulse and fuggestions. Nay, the went still further, and declared in the name of the Lord, that this defirable event would happen; and that she had a divine commission to proclaim the approach of this glorious communion of faints, who were to be gathered together in one visible universal church, or kingdom, before the diffolution of this earthly globe. This prediction fhe delivered with a peculiar degree of confidence, from a notion that her Philadelphian fociety was the true kingdom of CHRIST, in which alone the divine spirit resided and reigned. We shall not mention the other dreams of this enthufiaft, among which the famous doctrine of the final restoration of all intelligent Beings to perfection and happiness held an eminent place. LEADLEY was less fortunate than Bourignon in this respect, that she had not fuch an eloquent and ingenious patron as Poirer to plead her cause, and to give an air of philosophy to her wild reveries. For PORDAGE and BROMLEY, who were the chief of her affociates, had nothing to recommend them but their Mystic piety and contemplative turn of mind. PORDAGE, more especially, was so far destitute of the powers of elocution and reasoning, that he even surpassed TACOB BOEHMEN, whom he admired, in obscurity and nonfense; and, instead of imparting instruction to his readers, did no more than excite in them a flupid kind of awe by a high-founding jingle of pompous words [i].

[g] MOLLERI Cimbria Literata, tom. ii. p. 149.

[[]b] Poirer dressed out in an artful manner, and reduced of a kind of system, the wild and incoherent fancies of Bourionner, in his large work, intitled, L'Oeconomie Divine, ou Systeme Univerful, which was published, both in French and Latin, at Amsterdam, in the year 1686, in seven volumes 8vo.—For an account of this Myssic philosopher, whose name and voluminous writings have made such a noise, see Bibliotheca Errer, Theelog, Philol. tom. iii. p. 1. p. 75.

PART II.

[[]i] See Jo. WOLF.] AEGERI Historia Sacra et Civilis, Sac. xvii. Decenn. x. p. 90. - Petri Poirett Bibliocheca Medicor. p. 161. 174. 283. 286.

